Reds Only 8 Miles From Trapping Foe Jammed in Crimea

Lunge to Slash Last Rail Line From Peninsula

London (Monday), Nov. 1 (AP).—The Red Army smashed to within 8 miles of the Germans' last escape railway from the Crimea yesterday, virtually sealing the fate today of tens of thousands of Germans trapped in the Crimea.

Sweeping up 200 more villages and reconquering nearly all the Nogaisk steppe, a Moscow bulletin announced, Gen. Feodor Tolbukin's hard-riding fourth Ukraine army captured Chaplinka, flanking the Perekop door to the Crimea 15 miles to the southeast, and reaching a point only 8 miles from the railway itself, which leads to Kherson on the lower Dnieper River.

The Germans were expected to make a hard fight along the 60-mile track between Perekop and Kherson, but the line already has been rendered almost useless by Red artillery. It runs through flat lands, where no natural defenses exist.

Nazi Units Cut to Pieces

On the opposite side of the big Black Sea peninsula other floundering German forces were declared cut to pieces by General Tolbukhin's tank crews and Cossack cavalry which hurled them into a death corridor at the northeastern door of the Crimea.

The Russians took Novo-Alexeyevka, 10 miles west of Genichesk, which fell Saturday, and held the village at the top of the corridor, 20 miles long and 2 miles wide, through which the Melitopol Railway threads its way across the Sivash salt marshes and causeway into the Crimea.

The Germans in that sector made a last futile stand before being "quickly rolled back," losing 1000 men and 16 tanks as the Soviet wave washed over them.

Some London newspapers said one Russian spearhead was only 7 miles from Perekop.

Novo-Troitskoe, 35 miles northeast of Perekop, was declared captured by Red cavalrymen.

Heavy German Losses

"The enemy is sustaining huge losses in manpower and equipment," the communique said. "Pursued by our troops, the Germans are retreating, abandoning artillery, ammunition, infantry arms and military equipment. A large number of prisoners was taken."

German officers tried to whip their panicky remnants into some semblance of order, fighting on hastily erected lines which the Red army promptly obliterated.

Berlin radio utterances complained of the preponderant masses of Red Army men hurled against stricken Axis legions.

Estimates of Germans in the Crimea have ranged from tens of thousands to 500,000. There have been no reports indicating large-scale German withdrawals.

The Germans apparently now will draw on their reserves in the Crimea to hold the Perekop Isthmus and the Sivash Sea entries into the peninsula.

Inside the Dnieper River bend, the Russians said their troops killed about 2000 Germans in new gains

Nazis on Leave Said To Be Ordered to Russia

London (Monday), Nov. 1 (INS). All German troops on leave were reported from Stockholm early today to have been ordered to report immediately for service on the Russian front.

In all the cities of the "greater Reich" orders were flashed on motion picture screens and read from theater stages as well as in cafes and other public gathering places, commanding all soldiers and officers to hurry back to their units, it was said.

Baugh Sets Record For Scoring Passes As 'Skins Win, 48-10

Brooklyn, N. Y., Oct. 31.—Sammy Baugh pitched six touchdown passes for a new league record as the Washington Redskins won their fourth straight National Football League game here today, overwhelming the Brooklyn Dodgers, 48-10.

In other league games, Green Bay Packers scored twice late in the fourth period to down the New York Giants, 35-21; Chicago Bears toppled the Detroit Lions, 35-14, and Pittsburgh-Philadelphia Steagles routed the Chicago Cardinals, 34-13.

Rabaul Jolted Again, 45 Nip Planes Blasted

Allied Headquarters in the Southwest Pacific, Monday, Nov. 1 (AP).—The important Japanese airbase at Rabaul on New Britain Island suffered another of General MacArthur's sledgehammer blows on Friday. A strong force of Liberators, escorted by Lightnings, knocked down 45 enemy planes for certain against only four losses.

Meanwhile, American and New Zealand troops who invaded Choiseul Island encountered some opposition in the Vagara-Voza region in their advance southeastward along the coast of that isle, only 30 miles from Japan's big Bougainville stronghold.

Shortly after noon on Friday the Liberators unloaded 1000- and 500-pound bombs on Vunakanau airdrome at Rabaul from a high altitude, dropping a total of 115 tons of explosives.

Twenty Japanese planes in dispersal areas were wiped out from the bombing, with an additional five planes claimed as probably destroyed.

Before reaching their target, the

Newly Arrived Liberators Reported In Separate Unit

London, Oct. 31 (AP).—America's already-mighty Britain-based aerial armada is being heavily strengthened and the Eighth Air Force may soon approximate Britain's own RAF in size.

Until now, the Eighth Air Force has been doing only strategic bombing—blackening targets vital to the enemy's over-all ability to resist—but when the moment for the grand invasion arrives the Americans will have a force here capable of giving direct tactical support to the land army.

(CBS Correspondent Paul Manning reported from London that "a great number of Liberator bombers have been flown to England" to form a new attack unit distinctively separate from the Flying Fortresses.)

German apprehension over large concentrations of Allied shipping and troop transports in British Channel ports is increasing. Formations of troops including parachute troops are being massed in south and southeastern Britain, the Berlin radio has reported.

A recent flareup of skirmishes between British and Nazi coastal forces in the Channel has been stressed also by the Germans.

Perhaps contributing to the Nazis' uneasiness has been the intensive RAF campaign against the great docks of Cherbourg, France, which in peace time berthed the world's largest liners and are now being systematically smashed. They have been hit seven times during the last 12 days, the last time on Saturday by Typhoons and Whirlwinds.

Allies Edge Ahead Along Italian Front

U. S. Warships Shell German Lines; Heavy Bombers Raid Genoa and Riviera

Allied Headquarters, Algiers, Oct. 31 (AP).—The Allied Fifth and Eighth armies edged forward along the whole 90-mile length of the Italian Front, gaining from yards to a few miles, and speared to within 11 miles of Venafro and Isernia, central buttresses of the Nazi mountain line, it was announced today.

Air and sea arms sprang to new activity, with Allied heavy bombers smashing at industries on the Italian Riviera and at Genoa, and U. S. warships steaming into the Gulf of Gaeta in daylight to shell German communications again.

Some 20 more towns were enveloped by Allied infantrymen forging ahead in heavy rain and over the most difficult terrain.

Fifth Army troops occupied Allano, northwest of Raviscanina, and only 11 miles southeast of Venafro as menacing threats were developed against that important highway junction and equally strategic Isernia.

Eighth Army units driving northwest up the route from Boiano to Isernia seized San Massino and San Elena, 11 miles southeast and 12 miles east respectively of Isernia. San Massino and San Elena, perched on hills 1000 feet high, are on opposite sides of the Boiano-Isernia highway which the Germans are guarding with heavy forces to prevent a wedge from splitting their front.

Perilled From Two Directions

Isernia was threatened not only from the southeast by the British, but by Fifth Army units from Allano, some 14 miles south of Isernia. Firm control of the Allano area gave the Allies an excellent view over that part of the upper Volturno River valley remaining in German hands.

The German news agency, DNB, said Nazi forces had evacuated Frosolone, 12 miles due east of the Isernia stronghold of their mountain line. Frosolone is just northwest of San Elena and southwest of Molise, both in Allied hands.

Lieut. Gen. Mark W. Clark's forces near the west coast captured Nocelleto, about 18 miles inland, in a 2-mile gain, winning an

Hospital Visitor Distributes $100 Bills to Soldiers

Toronto, Oct. 31 (AP).—Scores of $100 bills, genuine folding money, were given away at random in the Christie Street Military Hospital here Saturday by an unidentified man who was accompanied by a United States Army officer.

Hospital authorities estimated $3800 was tossed to the patients.

The man, smoking a cigar, presented a $100 bill to the first patient he encountered at the front door. A member of the RCAF who received another of the bills said:

"The guy had a whole armful of money."

A nurse turned down two $100 bills and directed them instead to patients.

The stranger left as quietly as he entered, offering no explanation. He drove away in a motorcar. None of the patients could recall that he had said a word.

Communique Imminent

Fight-to-Finish Believed Decision of 3-Power Parley

(Stalin, Hull and Eden sit from 8:30 p. m. until 2:30 a. m. at a state dinner. Page 2.)

By Edward T. Folliard

A communique on the Three-Power Conference in Moscow is imminent, and it is expected to pledge the United States, Great Britain and Soviet Russia to fight side by side until Nazi Germany is crushed.

Adolf Hitler will be told in effect that any hope he may have had of dividing the United Nations, or of winning a separate peace with Russia, were in vain; that the coalition of mighty powers that is now smashing Germany will continue through to victory.

The communique also is expected to commit the United States, Britain and Russia to postwar cooperation to prevent future aggression.

The language covering this point is expected to be of a general nature, which would account for President Roosevelt's press conference statement Friday apropos the Senate debate on foreign policy. The President at that time expressed the hope that the Senate, in its resolution, would point out in general terms that we want to avoid future wars and will cooperate with other nations toward that end.

These are expected to be the chief points in the communique: First, a win-the-war pledge, at least so far as Europe is concerned; and, second, a statement that will hold out the promise that the United Nations also will win the peace.

If the communique is silent on many other problems—as, for example, treatment of a beaten Germany, European boundary disputes, dovetailing of military strategy, and so on—it will cause no surprise among well-posted officials here.

The contents of the Moscow communique apparently are already familiar in London, for yesterday afternoon CBS Correspondent Edward R. Murrow told his radio audience to get ready for a letdown. Murrow, a usually well-informed reporter, said that the communique will be issued today.

And when it comes, he said, "it cannot possibly measure up to the hopes and expectations aroused" in London by President Roosevelt's description—"a tremendous success."

Murrow said the President's phrase weighs more in London than it does in the United States.

"British officials," he continued, "refuse to comment on the conference and in private many of them admit that they don't understand why the President jumped the gun." His description of the outcome has been widely publicized, not only here but in the occupied countries and the communique, when it comes, cannot possibly measure up to the hopes and expectations aroused.

Different Aspect to Some

"An outcome that may appear tremendous in Washington may assume an entirely different aspect to people who are hungry, without shoes, and whose children are starving . . ."

Sees Heavy Strain on Foe

Halifax Says War Is at Point Where 'Anything Can Happen'

Lord Halifax, the British Ambassador, said yesterday that the war against Germany had reached the point "where anything may happen."

The towering diplomat, back from a two-month visit to England, said it was well to prepare for a tough struggle and to realize that the Germans were very great fighters. But the general conclusion in the old country, he said, was that the strain on the German army and on German civilians, thanks to military set-backs and the Anglo-American air offensive, was a heavy one and getting worse all the time.

"The German general staff," Lord Halifax said, "is faced with a difficult choice. It is that of finding more manpower, which is hard, or of pulling back. That's not very agreeable.

"It is like watching a juggler. He has a lot of balls in the air at one time. If he misses one—well, a lot of others are likely to fall down."

The Germans, he continued, have a very fine army and they have strong control over the civilian population. But this civilian setup, he said, is such a closely-geared machine that it is extremely brittle. Hence if one thing goes, it may lead to other dislocations and a breakup of the machine.

After telling how the people of England had reacted to the changing fortunes in the war—El Alamein, North Africa, Italy, the counteroffensive against U-boats, the bombing of Germany, and the "amazing" successes of the Red army—Lord Halifax said:

"The general conclusion is, without yielding too much to wishful thinking, that on the German side of the war anything may happen. However, we should not bank on that. We can store that in one part of our mind; in the other part we should prepare for a tough struggle against great fighters."

Won't Venture Victory Date

Lord Halifax was asked if he thought Germany would be defeated in 1944.

"Responsible people," he replied, "are a little bit hesitant about dates. I certainly wouldn't pin myself to a date. But if one tries to put himself in the position of the German general staff, and sees the enemy closing in from all sides, one knows they can't feel very good about it."

And Reunion With Men

Stunned Paratrooper, Ready For Combat, Finds Only Quiet

This is the second in a series of articles revealing the experiences of Lieut. Justin T. McCarthy, a paratrooper who played an important part in the American airborne attack which disrupted German communications and transport and contributed to the rapid push of the Allied main force into Naples. Lieut. McCarthy's first article published here yesterday, told of the approach to his objective and the jump—after which he landed in a stony river bed with an impact that knocked him "cold as a mackerel."

By Lieut. Justin T. McCarthy
(As Told to Richard Tregaskis)

On the Italian Front, Oct. 31 (INS).—When I came to, in that dry river bed, the place was as quiet as a stone, there were no planes in the sky, and no chutes that I could see on the ground.

The first thing I did was to reach back, pull out my pistol, and cock it. That was one of the things we'd been drilled on, because parachutists have been shot while they're getting out of their harness.

But there was no firing, and still no sound or motion, while I got rid of my reserve chute, the small chest pack, and unbuckled my harness.

It had been a kidney punch from a rock that knocked me cold when I hit. I'd come in backward and fallen hard. I'd been carrying clips for my carbine on the back of my belt, and they were bent from the impact so I couldn't use them. But outside of being a little bruised I wasn't hurt.

After a little looking around, I spotted a chute lying at the top of a hill. I worked my way up to it and found it was the parabundle chute. It had malfunctioned, and the bundle and everything in it were broken all to hell.

I started walking up the valley looking for my men, just guessing which direction to go. Usually you line up your men by following the direction the planes are flying. But this time when I came to—it must have been four or five minutes afte. I hit—all the planes had gone.

I was pretty nerved up, being all alone, and expected to hear a shot any minute. All of a sudden I heard a click, like metal against metal, and saw a man moving in the bushes. I dropped to one knee, and he jumped behind a stump and leveled his rifle at me. He challenged and I gave him the countersign. He was one of my men.

A few minutes later we found the whole stick of men from the ship. We started working west, because I figured we had landed to the east of our "dropping zone."

Cabinet 100% Anti-Allies

Little-Known Colonel Declared To Be Real Boss of Argentina

Copyright by New York Tribune, Inc.

Santiago, Chile, Oct. 31.—The guiding mind behind the Ramirez regime in Argentina is an "intelligent and ruthless" but almost unknown young colonel named Juan Peron. Well informed Argentines here from Buenos Aires say Colonel Peron differs from all other officers associated with the revolutionary regime in his belligerent determination to remain behind the scenes for the present.

There is nothing shy about Peron's character, however, according to those who know him. He is described as the man who forced Gen. Arturo Rawson to resign the presidency, who put President Pedro Pablo Ramirez into power and since has told him: "You can't resign until we are ready to let you quit;" who has successfully resisted all pressure for a break with the Axis and has engineered successive cabinet reorganizations until the ministry is now described as 100 per cent pro-Nazi, anti-Semitic, anti-United States and anti-Great Britain.

Peron is said to supply the brains for the group of pro-Nazi colonels who in June overthrew President Ramon S. Castillo because they did not consider him sufficiently pro-German.

It is said Peron has announced that any member of his group who betrays the principles of the revolution shall be shot. Apparently, however, neither he nor other members of the group are yet ready to begin shedding blood, as Gen. Elbio Anaya, former minister of public instruction and justice, was merely placed under arrest at his home. The group considers Anaya the first traitor because he entered the cabinet as an opponent of a rupture with the Axis and became converted to the

Millikin Asks Vote Delay on Postwar Plan

Results at Moscow Awaited by Senator; Reynolds to Offer Amendment Today

While factional leaders in the Senate debate over postwar policy were hopeful last night that action on the compromise Connally resolution could be taken by Thursday or Friday of this week, two new developments forecast continued battling and perhaps a delay in the decision.

Senator Millikin (Republican) of Colorado proposed that action be delayed until more is learned of the outcome of the Moscow conferences of the American, British and Russian foreign ministers.

At the same time, Senator Reynolds (Democrat) of North Carolina said he would introduce today an amendment to the pending resolution that he said would provide a guarantee of the independence and territorial integrity of "Latvia, Lithuania, Esthonia, Poland, Yugoslavia, Greece and other subjugated nations," an effort that would meet with little favor in Soviet Russia. Reynolds also said he would propose a complete substitute for the Connally measure, which has the backing of the Foreign Relations Committee, headed by Senator Connally (Democrat) of Texas.

"Working in Dark"

Millikin, speaking for delay in formulating the Senate stand on postwar relations, commented to the Associated Press:

"We are working in the dark now and we might look somewhat silly adopting a resolution which would not be compatible with some of the decisions made there," he declared.

Supporters of the resolution frowned on the proposal.

While the Colorado Senator said he thought nothing could be lost by a few days' delay, Chairman Connally (Democrat), Texas, of the Foreign Relations Committee, saw no reason why the Senate should not proceed to a decisive vote later in the week on his resolution, which would urge the United States to join with free and sovereign nations in establishing world authority with power to prevent aggression.

Similarly, Senator George (Democrat) of Georgia, a member of the committee which drafted the mea-

Soldier Borrows Stage-Door Piano For Street Dance

It was all a little strange the way it happened there on E st. last night.

Properties and trunks were spread about the sidewalk, ready to be moved into the National Theater. There was a white piano there, half covered by a tarpaulin, and the group of soldiers and girls came up to it and one of them exclaimed:

"Oh, a piano!"

One of the soldiers, a young lieutenant, pushed the tarpaulin aside and picked out a tune on the keyboard. The music rang out over the quiet street and a crowd soon gathered from nowhere. Two couples began to dance among the packing cases and trunks.

The lieutenant played through the piece, then stopped and raised his hands over his head as a winning boxer does.

"That's all, folks," he said, and took his girl by the arm and walked away. The crowd slowly dispersed.

3290 Complaints Handled

D. C. Rent Control Law Credited With Saving Tenants $400,000

By Hanson H. Hathaway

Washington's emergency rent control law already has saved District tenants nearly $400,000 in actual rent reductions and can virtually eliminate "black market" rentals here if tenants will cooperate in its enforcement, Rent Administrator Robert Cogswell asserted yesterday.

Complaints by 3290 tenants, acted upon during the first half of this year, were directly responsible for savings of more than $82,000. Cogswell's semiannual report also showed estimated savings of some $15,000 made through informal complaints to the public relations department.

The report shows that between January 1 and June 30 of this year, 2756 formal petitions for rent adjustments had been made, bringing the total to 15,032 cases since January 1, 1942. There are 898 cases waiting to be heard now. On June 30, the report showed, 1093 cases remained unscheduled.

In one instance, action of the rent administration resulted in cutting the rent of a 4-story building from $183.50 to $80 a month, it was disclosed. In this particularly flagrant case of rent racketeering, roomers in the house complained about over-charges and were told by the tenant of the place that she had to pass on the "exorbitant" rental charged her.

Cogswell investigated the service standards, location and desirability of the premises and ordered the rent slashed by $103.50.

Another case under investigation is a swanky apartment building on Columbia rd. which it said to have consistently charged uncomplaining and law-ignorant tenants substantial amounts above rent ceilings.

'Rationing' Of Soft Coal Likely Here

The prospect of retailers limiting quantities of soft coal that may be purchased beginning today loomed yesterday as Washington coal dealers waited anxiously for further developments at the mines and in governmental circles, which are expected today or tomorrow.

Some dealers feared another order which would fix the quantity of soft coal that could be delivered to a domestic consumer, similar to the half a ton at the time order issued Saturday on hard or anthracite coal.

Frozen at Mines

Already lump soft coal at the mines, amounting to some million tons, has been frozen. Another order freezing that now in transit is possible, dealers said yesterday.

However, it is not considered likely that restrictions will be placed on the sales of run of the mine coal, at anytime in the immediate future.

Summed up the coal picture for Washington—and the Nation—amounted to this:

(1) All anthracite coal and all lump soft coal has been frozen at the mines.

(2) Complete control over hard coal has been established to the extent that a domestic user is not allowed to purchase more than a 10 days' supply, or half a ton, whichever is the least.

(3) Soft coal in transit has not yet been frozen but dealers are fearful that such an order will be issued today.

(4) The future coal situation depends on actions today and to-

War Fund Reaches Only 71.5% of Goal

Donations Received From Those Anxious To Aid Campaign

While Community War Fund workers still must plead in Washington homes and business offices for $1,368,000 more in gifts of brotherhood, donations, from persons whose desire to give isn't measured by their ability to give, are coming to fund headquarters unsolicited.

Washington's goal is $4,800,000—only 71.5 per cent subscribed as the campaign entered its fifth week yesterday. It was to have closed last Friday, but a week's extension proved necessary as laggard Washingtonians failed the needs of its home front, its fighting allies and its servicemen and women.

Yet, even as many families here ignored the appeals of 145 agencies, two sailors sent checks for $200 and $50 over the high seas to local fund officials.

Negro Gives $50

As better-paid war workers neglected support of the needy on three fronts, a Negro waitress in a Pentagon cafeteria contributed $50. Her husband is at an overseas battlefront and, through his letters, she realized what the Community War Fund means to him.

A solicited gift of $10,000 is important to realization of Washington's goal, but an unexpected gift of $10 carries even more the brotherhood spirit which is the theme of the drive. Children at the Barney Neighborhood House gave that much, in nickels and pennies, from their dues to the club. Their gift to the fund expressed hope that support will continue for their "second home."

UMW Chiefs Meet Today; President's Action Waited

Fourth Strike of Year Believed Possibility; Operators Prepare To Close Down

The Nation's soft coal miners last night reached the end of the period through which they had agreed to continue working without a contract, and nervous officialdom and citizenry watched for the effect of the passing of the deadline on fuel production, thrice reduced previously by general strikes this year.

A virtual shutdown today throughout the bituminous coal area appeared under way with most of the half million miners quitting work pending fresh word from their officials as to their course.

With the men standing on the union's traditional declaration of "no contract, no work," members of the United Mine Workers Policy Committee were gathering in Washington, summoned to meeting today to decide whether the men shall accept the War Labor Board's decision reducing by 37½ cents daily the increased pay provided under an agreement reached between the union and the Illinois coal operators, an agreement which the miners had intended to press as a basic contract for the entire soft coal industry.

President Pledged Action

The miner officials were to meet facing President Roosevelt's promise to the Nation of "decisive action" to keep the coal mines producing if the union should reject the contract as revised by WLB.

What action the President contemplated taking, in case the miners refuse the new terms, was only a matter for speculation, but it was pointed out last night that following Government seizure of the mines last June, some 30 miners who participated in insurgent strikes in Pennsylvania were indicted for violation of the Connally-Smith law which forbids striking in an establishment taken over by the Government. Twenty-seven of the miners later were given suspended sentences of six months each and a probation period of three years, Federal Judge F. P. Schoonmaker explaining that "I am lenient with you because you have been misled in your actions."

Another seizure of the mines, if the current work stoppage does not end promptly, generally was expected last night.

Illinois Pact Reviewed

The Illinois agreement, worked out by the union and Illinois operators, would have put all soft coal miners on an 8½ hour day based on the time they entered the mines until they left. The proposed basic wage of $8.50 a day with overtime for more than 40 hours a week.

WLB said it would approve $8.12½ for an 8½ hour portal-to-portal day. The present scale is $7 for a seven-hour day with no

Yugoslav Town Cleared of Nazis

War Sidelights

Yanks Act Like 'Pigs,' Nazis Say

Stockholm, Oct. 31 (AP).—U. S. soldiers conduct themselves "like pigs" in England, and there are "innumerable clear gangster types" among them, the Nazi press said today, quoting exchanged German prisoners of war.

These "gangster types commit lust murders and similar crimes but their sentences by U. S. courts in England are felt (by the British) to be lenient," said accounts published in German newspapers reaching Stockholm. Other statements:

"The English as well as the Canadians are tired of war."

"There is open hate in England toward the Americans."

"Fear of German reprisals for terror attacks on Germany is growing in England."

"Tuberculosis has spread dangerously because of difficult food conditions."

"The simple man in England shows exceptional interest in Germany's social achievements and arrangements, which stand in bold contrast to the miserable conditions among the working class in England."

U. S. Fliers Interned

Sevilla, Spain, Oct. 31 (AP).—Twelve American fliers who were forced to land in Spain some time ago while en route to North Africa in three aircraft have been transferred to Jarava de Aragon, a health resort near Zaragoza, for internment.

Saboteurs Wreck Train

London, Oct. 31 (AP).—Saboteurs wrecked the Paris-Marseille express last night, killing seven persons and injuring 25, the Paris radio said today. It was the third blow by saboteurs against this line in recent days.

10 Italians Executed

Stockholm, Oct. 31 (AP).—Ten Italian "Communists" charged with attacking German soldiers in the streets of Rome have been executed, Berlin dispatches to Swedish newspapers said today.

Albanian Units Fight Alongside Tito's Partisans

London, Oct. 31 (AP).—United by a common enemy, Albanian guerillas fighting alongside the Yugoslav Partisans of General Josip (Drug Tito) Broz have thrown the German invaders from the Yugoslav town of Tebar, on the Drin River near the Albanian border, a National Army of Liberation communique declared today.

The victory was tempered, however, by Tito's acknowledgement that the town of Kicevo, 23 miles east of Debar, had been wrested from guerilla control. Tito charged that Chetnik forces of Yugoslav War Minister Draja Mihailovic had assisted the German column in defeating his Partisans, a charge he has made numerous times before.

Kicevo lies astride the rail line extending southeast from Skoplje in the Vardar Valley to Greece, and is in territory Hitler assigned to Bulgaria in the break-up of Yugoslavia.

Rail Link Severed

Elsewhere, Tito said his red-starred followers had cut the rail line linking Belgrade with Pozarevac in Serbia, were conducting offensive operations in the north on the Serbian-Bosnian border, were attacking Nazi positions on the Sava River in Eastern Bosnia and were continuing a desperate battle against the surrounded German garrison at Prijedor, 70 miles southeast of Zagreb.

Suffer 1000 Casualties

The Germans suffered more than 1000 casualties in the Partisan offensive near Berani, in Montenegro and other Partisan forces continued to engage German forces which have gained a foothold on the Peljesac Peninsula in Dalmatia, the communique continued.

A British naval officer recently returned from the Yugoslav fighting zone said German garrisons in the large seaport towns were "beleaguered on all sides—by land and sea." The garrisons are cut off and are forced to rely on planes and expensive armored columns for supplies, he said.

Credits Allied Support

Stockholm, Oct. 31 (AP).—Propaganda Minister Paul Joseph Goebbels, attempting to explain the prolonged resistance of the Yugoslavs, said today that it was due to American and British support.

Travelers said both soldiers and civilians had begun to ask: "If the German army cannot master a few bands of guerillas, how can it win the war against the United States, Britain and Russia?"

One German report said "masses of booty" captured by the Germans included American weapons, trucks and "great amounts of gold pieces and United States dollars," along with British uniforms, parachute material and radios.

Another report reaching here said German forces in Yugoslavia were being reinforced constantly, and that trains were sabotaged with such frequency that the Nazis now were sending handcars manned by prisoners ahead of the trains to set off mines.

Parks Thronged As Temperature Jumps to 64

A sun, reminiscent of early September, brought crowds into Washington parks yesterday to enjoy an Indian summer day with the temperature mounting to 64 degrees at 4 p. m.

Soldiers, sailors, marines, WACS, WAVES, SPARS and girls with no military status, except that conferred by their escorts, filled every available bench in Lafayette Park. Even the one where Bernard Baruch is accustomed to transact business in the shadow of the Jackson statue was taken.

Sailors, holding steadfast to nautical training, sat on the backs of many of the benches. Apparently it gave them a homelike feeling of perching on a ship's rail.

Stalin Toasts Talks Success, Allied Arms

By Eddy Gilmore

Moscow, Oct. 31 (AP).—Premier Marshal Joseph Stalin, glittering in his new marshal's uniform and obviously in fine spirits, arose at last night's state dinner in the Kremlin and proposed toasts to the success of the tripartite conference, the United State and British armies in Italy, and their airmen in Britain.

On his right was America's silver-haired Secretary of State Cordell Hull, on his left British Ambassador Sir Archibald Clark Kerr; across the table were United States Ambassador W. Averell Harriman and British Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden.

Unsurpassed Hospitality

"You can't imagine how it was," said one American today. "I've never seen such hospitality and I've never seen people from three countries get along so well together."

More than a score of toasts were made, to the Allied war and merchant navies, to the Soviet forces, to President Roosevelt, to Prime Minister Churchill, and to "victory."

The dinner began at 8:30 p. m. and adjourned at 2:30 a. m., with the 72-year-old Hull thoroughly enjoying himself and staying until the end. He was up early this morning to eat a hearty breakfast and plunge into more work.

Stalin "Smokes Up"

The talk flowed constantly during the dinner. Interpreters sat close to the six principals. Stalin smoked cigarettes, both Russian and American, and intermittently puffed on a pipe, using tobacco given him recently by Donald M. Nelson, U. S. War Production Board chief.

While Hull remained close to Spasso House, the United States Embassy, most of today, the conference's experts and drafting committee still labored to put the finishing touches on the work of the main delegates.

ure, said he doubted that the Moscow conference would produce results that would affect the Senate's stand on postwar problems.

"I look for some declaration at Moscow that the United States, Britain and Russia agree to push vigorous offensives on all fronts until the final victory is won—in other words, that no one of the Allies will stop fighting until our troops march into Berlin," he said.

George's Attitude

George emphasized he had no knowledge of what is happening in Moscow, but said he did not believe the conference had dealt with future European borders—a question that was broached in the Senate last week by Senator Wheeler (Democrat) of Montana, who opposes making any postwar declaration at this time.

Wheeler told his colleagues passage of the Connally resolution was certain to be interpreted by Russia as backing up her possible territorial claims in the Baltic and elsewhere in Europe.

Announcing his amendment on the independence of Latvia, Estonia, and other countries said in a statement:

Free Elections Needed

"Until free elections have taken place in the liberated territories, the acceptance of the Russian viewpoint of annexation and aggrandizement would certainly mean a betrayal of our pledges."

Senator Danaher (Republican) of Connecticut, who has proposed an amendment which would write the principles of the Atlantic Charter into the Connally measure, holds the floor today.

President William Green of the American Federation of Labor called on Congress to make formal statement acknowledging "America's share of responsibility for maintaining world peace."

"Experience shows," he said in an editorial in the American Federationist, official AFL organ, "that the use of police power is an essential condition to maintenance of order in any geographic division. This is equally true of international order."

southwest of Dnepropetrovsk, and killed 3000 more in savage tank and infantry engagements near Krivoi Rog. Scores of tanks, planes and guns were destroyed, the bulletin said.

At one point the Germans lost 500 automatic riflemen and a large number of boats in an effort to land a group in the rear of Russians operating along the Dnieper, it said.

Fresh Russian gains southwest of Dnepropetrovsk inside the Dnieper bend also were announced, but no specific mileage was given.

At Krivoi Rog the Germans still were putting up a terrific fight. The communique said that large enemy forces of tanks and infantry, still counterattacking, were beaten off.

The German high command declared the Russians lost more than 400 tanks in the last three days in the epic struggle for Krivoi Rog, big manganese and iron center and rail junction.

Moscow said the Red Army knocked out 92 tanks in Saturday's fighting and shot down 23 planes. Most of this toll apparently was taken at Krivoi Rog, which the Germans must hold to prevent the entrapment of their forces fighting a slow withdrawal down from the Dnepropetrovsk area on the northeast and the other units fleeing from the Nogaisk steppes to the southeast.

German radio commentators devoted most of their broadcasts to praise of the Axis stand at Krivoi Rog, and sought to minimize the disaster on the steppes below the Dnieper.

One, Maj. Otto Lehmann, commented: "The Russians, with their mass of human material available for this decisive struggle, are undoubtedly superior to the core of the German army."

Alexander Vailyev, Moscow news correspondent, described in detail the Soviet surge to the Crimea and toward the lower Dnieper.

"The plains were literally black with our tanks which came down like an avalanche on the retreating Germans. The blow was so powerful that the retreat of some German units turned into a flight. The Germans abandoned a vast amount of materiel on the roads leading west from Melitopol.

"The remains of artillery pieces and machineguns crushed by our tanks and the corpses of German soldiers and officers can be seen everywhere.

"Our mobile units struck first of all at road junctions to intercept the retreating enemy. There were several such junctions beyond Melitopol. Thanks to the swift capture of these points as well as others the Germans lost a chance to offer prolonged resistance in this region. Moreover they are faced with major difficulty in withdrawing troops and equipment."

A Red Star dispatch said the German command hurriedly sent in reserves of tanks, self-propelled artillery and Stuka divebombers, but was unable to halt the Soviet tide.

tremendous success at his Friday news conference was very deliberate; in fact, he spoke the words twice. He certainly knew they would be flashed around the world.

It may have been that he knew of things that happened in Moscow—military arrangements, for example—that won't even be hinted at in the forthcoming communique. But it appeared to those who were in his office, and heard his exultant announcement, that what most impressed him about the Three-Power Conference was the friendly spirit that pervaded it.

It was this friendly spirit, as well as the agreements that had been reached, he said, that made the conference such a tremendous success. Relations between Secretary Hull, Secretary Eden and Foreign Commissar Molotov, he added, had been 100 per cent good. As they would say in the Navy, they had a happy ship.

Onlookers got the impression that Mr. Roosevelt felt that with such cordiality established, the Big Three were well on their way to a historic achievement, both in war and in peace.

One immediate result of the friendliness generated at Moscow is that the Russian newspapers, which not so long ago were clamoring for a "second front," are now hailing the Allied drive in Italy and the Anglo-American air offensive against Germany.

Nazi Strain Is Increasing, Halifax Says

the British Embassy, was asked how he felt about the five United States Senators who recently traveled around the world, visiting the battlefronts. He said he thought Prime Minister Churchill's remark was a good one—that this was not a good time for "wordy warfare" between allies.

He said he was in complete agreement with Wendell Willkie's advice to the British not to mix in American domestic politics.

He said that if he ever found that any British official responsible to him was mixing in American politics, he would take a very grave view of it. In response to a question, he said no orders had been issued to British officials to keep hands off of the 1944 presidential campaign.

LORD HALIFAX

"Our natural intelligence ought to suggest that to us," he said, smiling.

British a "Bit Tired"

Telling about how England looked to him after a year's absence, the British envoy said his people were a "bit tired" as they went into the fifth year of war, but were in no way slacking off. They had been cheered by the triumphs on many fronts and were certain of victory. Food was wholesome and dull, and yet the people were thriving on it. Everybody was working hard, including grandmothers.

Lord Halifax said it gave him a grand feeling to see the signs back on country roads and to hear the tolling of church bells once again. The signs had been taken down in 1940 when an invasion was expected, and the bells were silenced so that they could give warning of German parachutists. With some emotion, he told of sitting on a hillside where he had sat once before in the dark days after France fell. Then he was thinking of what a horror it would be to have alien boots treading on this English soil. This time, sitting on the hillside, he knew that there would be no such desecration and he mentioned the 'feeling that gave one."

When Lord Halifax returned to England two months ago, he was accompanied by Lady Halifax and their son, Lieut. Richard Wood, who lost both legs fighting under Montgomery in North Africa. The son is now being fitted for artifical legs. He will return with Lady Halifax in about a month.

We could hear firing going on to the west, but we had no idea what it was. There was no firing near us. We moved on very carefully.

It was pretty heavily wooded terrain, as well as being hilly. We looked at every bush, expecting a battalion or at least a company of Germans to come out.

Then I saw something move in the bushes. I put up my hand and stopped the column, and we got into position, spread out in a fan shape. I took out a hand grenade and started for the bushes, figuring there must be about 888 Jerries in there.

I got up to the bushes and saw some eyes looking out at me. I pointed my carbine at them and motioned the people to come out.

Refugees Emerge

They were Italian men, women and children, refugees, and they came out with their hands up. Some of the women got down and kneeled and cried, and I guess they were asking for mercy. They thought we were Germans.

I showed them the American flag on my sleeve, and they said "Americano," and jumped up and threw their arms around us and started kissing our hands and faces and our clothes.

One big Italian got a bear hug on me and hung on and started kissing my cheeks. I couldn't get him off and I didn't want to hit him. But the people were making so much noise—they thought we were part of a large American force and got pretty excited—that we had to quiet them down.

Finally we got them quiet enough so I could ask them how far it was to Avellino. I knew how to say that much in Italian: "Quanti kilometri Avellino."

Some of them said 25 kilometers, and some said 30 or 32 or 40. And then, as they usually do, they started arguing about who was right. But they indicated the general direction, at least, and Major Dudley told us to head that way.

Italians Hide Chutes

We noticed that some of the Italians had picked up our chutes, and were trying to hide them. They figured this was stealing and wanted to cover it up, but it was just what we wanted: To get the chutes off the ground and hidden so there would be no trace of our having landed. I told the Italians to get all the chutes they could find and take them to their houses or bury them, but to give them back later on because we would need them for "La guerra." (The war.)

After that there was a general stampede to get the chutes, and Italians were running all over the place, in the woods and the valleys, holding chutes in their arms. It was pretty funny to see them as busy as that at 3 o'clock in the morning, as if they'd struck gold out in the hills.

We moved on in the direction of Avellino, and had one more false alarm. I was at the point, then, with the leading element as I had been before, and we saw bushes moving in the moonlight. We set up a line and moved in on them. But it turned out that six cows were making all the trouble.

Unit Reaches Cassano

We headed down a road and after what seemed a long while we came to a bunch of buildings. It was the edge of a town, but it was Cassano, not Avellino. There we met Captain Tomasik (Capt. Edmund J. Tomasik of 15 Roosevelt st., New Bedford, Mass.), the supply officer, with some men. That brought the total of our little army to about 50.

All of a sudden a machine gun opened up from the left near the rear of the column. It was a Jerry; you can always spot them by the rapid rate of fire. I saw the red line of tracer bullets from this fellow and it looked as if he were firing solid tracer.

There was a wall at the edge of the road and I had my men take cover there. Then the major told us to get off the road and down into a field, where it would be safer; and we did. But the firing stopped, and we moved on, thinking that probably somebody at the rear of the column had taken care of the sniper.

We went on into the town, and the natives started coming out of their houses, laughing and weeping for joy, and bringing us bread and water and fruit. They figured a big bunch of American troops had come and the war was over. They didn't know we were paratroopers.

Guided to High Ground

One of the Italians said he would guide us to some high ground where we'd be able to set up a position. Pfc. Jack Alongi of 488 Manistique ave., Detroit, Mich., did the parleying, and we started up the hill.

Some of the men dropped off and stayed behind in the town—about eight or ten of them. Some of them had sprained ankles from the jump and some were just tired from the long hike and wanted to stay where the food was good.

But most of us ploughed on up that hill, although it was terrifically steep and we were worn out. We knew if we stayed in the town, Jerry might catch us there in the morning with an artillery concentration, and it would be a death trap.

So we got up to the top of the hill somewhere around 4 o'clock and began digging in. We got a little sleep in our foxholes and then it was daylight, and we could hear firing down in the town—machine guns and rifles and a B. A. R. (Browning automatic rifle).

Looking down, we could see that the Jerries had an armored car moving up and down the main street, and a party of men were going into the houses, searching. They were looking for us; and there were little shooting scrapes as they found some of our men hiding in the houses. We knew then that our job had begun.

Paddy, 'Chutists' Mascot, Credited With Five Jumps

Camp Mackall, N. C., Oct. 31 (AP).—Paddy, 2½-month old pup of uncertain ancestry but definitely born to her business, is the pride of the 508th Parachute Battalion at Camp Mackall.

Paddy has made five jumps—hitch-hiking in the uniform pocket of some member of the battalion.

Pct. Bernard Keffer, Brooklyn, explained that Paddy's mother, a stray German shepherd dog that attached herself to the outfit, started it. The mother dog used her own 'chute and carried a pack of food and medical supplies. She made four jumps—the last time her 'chute didn't open.

Paddy hasn't tried a solo yet.

AP Correspondent, Allen, Reported To Have Escaped

Algiers, Oct. 31 (INS).—Larry Allen, an Associated Press correspondent captured by the enemy more than a year ago, was reported today to have escaped from a prison camp and to have reached Bari, in southern Italy, after walking more than a month to cross the Allied lines.

Allen reportedly escaped in northern Italy shortly after announcement of the Italo-Allied armistice. Edgar Roubeau, correspondent for the Pittsburgh Courier, said he was told in Bari that Allen had registered at the Miramar Hotel there.

He was captured when he went on a British Commando raid in the summer of 1942, near the port of Tobruk, in Libya.

From captivity he sent postcards to President Roosevelt, asking his exchange be expedited but such an exchange was never arranged.

Heavy Tax Refunds Cautioned Against

Big Payments to Corporations May Arouse Public Indignation, Helvering Warns

By Francis M. Le May
Associated Press Staff Writer

The House Way and Means Committee, winding up work on new tax legislation, was cautioned yesterday that public indignation over tax refunds to corporations might "dwarf even the experience" after the last war.

The warning was contained in a letter Guy T. Helvering wrote Treasury Secretary Morgenthau as one of his last official acts as internal revenue commissioner before becoming a Federal judge. Copies were distributed to the committee.

Helvering cited unofficial reports that the refunds might run from 15 billion to 30 billion dollars and said "it may not be unreasonable to think" that such rebates of previously collected taxes "will present a grave problem of national financing."

While suggesting no irregularities on the part of corporations, Helvering said sound administration appears to demand an over-all study of the probable effect upon future tax revenues of the provisions now in tax statutes for corporation relief, postwar refunds, excess profit credits and possible adjustment of amortization benefits.

"Unless the public mind is thoroughly prepared for the amounts of corporate refunds that will have to be made," the memorandum said, "the payment of such refunds may develop a critical press and provide opportunities for political discussion of tax administration that will dwarf even the experience that followed the adjustment of the tax accounts of corporations after the last war" when complaints of undue enrichment were voiced.

Helvering suggested the matter be called to the attention of the President.

Other tax developments:

1. The Ways and Means Committee hastened to complete tax chores this week, sending to the House floor a bill with $1,800,000,000 to two billion dollars in new revenue —80 per cent short of the Administration's recommended $10,500,000,000.

George Praises Group

2. Chairman George (Democrat) of Georgia of the Senate Finance Committee commended the House group for cutting back the tax bill and called for cuts in Government spending to save five billion dollars to 10 billion dollars annually.

3. Revival of reports that the split between the Administration and Congress on tax matters had widened to a point where Randolph Paul, Treasury general counsel, plans to resign soon. Friends quoted Paul as saying he had handled three tax bills before Congress, "and that's enough for anybody."

The House committee expected to do more reshuffling today of its previously approved list of higher excises on so-called luxuries, and also of postal rates.

Representative Knutson (Republican) of Minnesota, the committee's Republican leader, said there was "tremendous pressure for a cut-back" in the general admissions tax, which the committee raised from 10 to 30 per cent, and he predicted the air mail rate, boosted to 10 cents in the bill, would be put back to the present 6 cents.

Halloween Vandals Knock Nose Off Capitol's Justice Statue

By the Associated Press

Justice, proverbially blind, is in no shape to smell either, Senator Francis Maloney of Connecticuit discovered yesterday in a Halloween-timed inspection of vandalism at the United States Capitol.

The entire nose is missing from her sculptured likeness over the main outside entrance to the Senate wing of the Capitol, and her seat-mate, History, likewise is minus her once daint bugle.

David Lynn, architect of the Capitol, who accompanied Senator Maloney, attributed the girls' missing schnozzolas to the fact that they were sculptured years ago in soft marble which has begun to disintegrate in Washington's fogs and frost.

Bronze Door Damaged

But Lynn and Maloney, who is chairman of the Senate Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, quickly agreed that no such impersonal malefactor was responsible for disfigurement of the $22,500 intricately decorated bronze door beneath the statues.

Designed and executed some 85 years ago by Thomas Crawford, the massive door is divided into a series of panels depicting historical moments. Images of Revolutionary soldiers and their leaders appear in high relief.

Souvenir hunters have made the most of that fact. The slender bronze reins of George Washington's horse have been snatched from the first President's gloved hand; a gallant American captain flourishes only a stubby hilt of a sword as he leads his men in a charge; the bayonets and muzzles of those soldiers' muskets have been twisted away and jammed into some visitor's pocket.

Nothing much can be done about it except increase the vigilance of the Capitol's guards, Lynn said.

Damage Inside Capitol

"Vandalism of this type is a disgraceful tradition," Maloney said. "This type of person attacks shrines all over the world."

He asked Lynn to arrange to erase with a sandblast the names and initials which have been scratched deep into the stonework of the building itself.

Works of art inside the Capitol have suffered from similar vandalism. Somebody took home the trigger guard from the long rifle held in the sculptured hands of Stephen F. Austin, Texas hero. Ethan Allen's marble sword, broken into six pieces, was glued back together.

A big square of canvas, slashed out of the huge painting of Commodore Perry at the Battle of Lake Erie, was found on the floor beneath the work of art, and later replaced so it is scarcely noticeable.

Baptists Gain 1000 Members In Revival Drive

Approximately 67,000 persons attended services and more than 1000 members were added to congregations during the citywide Baptist evangelistic campaign that ended last night, leaders announced.

Most of the 30 Baptist churches cooperating in the drive climaxed the campaign with baptismal rites last night, and other special programs during the day. At Temple Baptist Church, Dr. John R. Sampey, former president of Louisville Baptist Seminary, and of the Southern Baptist Convention, told the story of his life.

Baptist pastors will hold a breakfast meeting today at 8:45 a. m. at the YWCA, 614 E st. nw., to turn in final reports on the drive. The Baptist Sunday School Association will meet tonight at 7:45 o'clock at Second Baptist Church, 17th and East Capitol st., to install new officers and hear plans on conserving the gains of the evangelistic campaign.

2 Men in Uniform Rob Taxi Driver

Military and Metropolitan police last night were searching for two men in Army uniform who held up and robbed a taxi driver of $15 early Sunday morning. The cabby, Charles G. Hood, 40, of 3311 Carpenter st. se., told police he gave the men his money when one of them prodded him with a pistol.

It may have seemed like a Halloween prank to the two taxi fares, but to Hood it was a deadly serious matter. He picked up the men in the 3000 block of 14th st. nw. and was told to drive to 3805 10th st. nw.

As he stopped the cab at the address, both soldiers stepped out and proceeded to rob him. Hood described the pair as being in Army private's uniforms, wearing overseas caps.

President's Message on Food Expected to Spark Subsidy Fray

By the Associated Press

President Roosevelt's message to Congress today on food is expected to spark a full scale renewal of the congressional battle over farm policies in general and food subsidies in particular.

The fight over subsidy payments to keep down food prices for consumers has flared sporadically on Capitol Hill for several days.

The President has taken the position that subsidies are the most practical method of holding the line against inflation. But the House Banking Committee has approved legislation prohibiting use of Commodity Credit Corporation funds for payment of subsidies.

House Agriculture Committee opposition to subsidies has been plain.

Representative Patman (Democrat), Texas, chairman of the House Small Business Committee, has taken the lead in the House in urging food price subsidies, declaring them to be the only device yet suggested which will prevent increases in the cost of living and "ruinous inflation."

Lift for Fulmer Bill

The President's message is expected to result in a renewed attempt to bring out of the Rules Committee a bill by Chairman Fulmer (Democrat), South Carolina, of the House Agriculture Committee creating an office for one man to have charge of the entire wartime food program, from farm machinery to rationing. Fulmer's committee has recommended passage of the measure.

"We believe," Representative Hope (Republican), Kansas, said, "that the Fulmer bill will do a lot to stimulate food production."

The President's message will reach Congress while some members still are seething over Tuesday's action by the Office of Price Administration and Fred M. Vinson, economic stabilization director, in issuing an order for control of live cattle prices by changing the method of subsidy payments to packers.

OPA Officials Questioned

The Agriculture Committee met at the request of Representative Kleberg (Democrat), Texas, a cattle producer, and questioned OPA officials as to the need for the order.

The committee was told it was designed to take the squeeze off nonprocessing slaughterers.

Kleberg charged the order would result in a decrease in cattle production. Hope and Representative Poage (Democrat) of Texas also charged the order had created havoc on livestock markets.

The House Agriculture Committee is split widely over the question of margarine versus butter. A dozen witnesses have appeared during the last week urging passage of legislation to lift Federal taxes and restrictions so as to increase production of margarine during the wartime shortage of butter and milk. Hearings will be resumed Tuesday, with dairy interests yet to be heard.

Investigating another angle of the food situation, the House Agriculture Committee has summoned OPA and War Food Administration officials today to tell what plans they have made for a sugar beet program and for placing ceilings on citrus fruits.

Rent Law Saves Tenants $400,000

it, and need fear no reprisals from angered landlords whom they expose, is illustrated in the rent savings report of Administrator Cogswell, here given:

Rent savings (January 1-June 30, 1943)

Estimated annual rental savings to tenants in 3290 cases decided, $82,250.

Estimated savings effected through Public Relations Division informal complaints, $14,983.35.

Cumulative total rental savings in formal cases January 1, 1932-December 31, 1942, $254,682.24.

Total cumulative rental savings effected through Public Relations Division, informal complaints, $30,000.

This report adds up to a grand savings total of $381,915.59.

Up to the Public

Loathe to undertake "Gestapo" methods of ferreting out lawbreaking landlords, Cogswell reiterated that it's up to the public to stamp out what seems to be a spreading rental evil.

His office, he admitted, is not equipped to keep up a thorough investigating system on rents here and the responsibility of "holding the line" is therefore squarely up to those who suspect they are not being treated fairly.

The following interesting case is currently under investigation. A woman, answering The Post appeal to share quarters during the emergency, took in two girls. The three split expenses, $20 per month each for an apartment whose rent and upkeep totaled $60.

She was charged $10 more a month rent, which she refused to pay on allegation of an attorney that she violated terms of her lease.

It developed that the building had been sold, and the new landlord apparently was out to get "his" at expense of the building tenants.

In a prior court appearance the same lawyer, apparently not sure of his stand, asked for dismissal of the charges he had brought.

The case will be of interest to those with leases who have tried to help in the current emergency by providing shelter for others.

Spurred by news of a $22,636 gift, supporters of the Central Union Mission yesterday pledged to carry on the project long supervised by the late John and Jean Bennett.

Mrs. Bennett died last September 13 after six years as mission superintendent, having succeeded her husband, John S. Bennett, who died September 1, 1937, after 22 years as mission superintendent. Servicemen are using the building's facilities for the duration.

Members of Protestant churches supporting the mission, attending the annual mission service at Calvary Baptist Church, were told by Edward H. DeGroot, jr., chairman of the mission board, that the mission has received $22,636 as residuary legate in the estate of William J. Sibley, for whom Sibley Hospital is named.

The Sibley gift and $5000 raised by the mission's women's organizations will be used to reduce the $50,000 debt on the John S. Bennett Memorial Building. Dr. Clarence W. Cranford, Calvary Baptist pastor, was principal speaker at the mass meeting.

Arkansas Society Hears Beatty

The Arkansas State Society held its first meeting of the season at the Statler Hotel yesterday. More than 400 were in attendance.

The principal speaker was Morgan Beatty, Washington correspondent, recently returned from London, who described war ravaged areas and the suffering of noncombatants. He said the food situation has grown so desperate in some localities that starvation and diseases, attendant on malnutrition, theatened extermination of a great part of the population.

Beatty, a native of Arkansas, was introduced by Representative Fadjo Cravens of the Fourth Arkansas District. Rear Admiral Earle W. Mills, 6208 Hillcrest pl., Chevy Chase, was present.

Following Beatty's remarks a reception was held with the Arkansas congressional delegation in the receiving line headed by Senator Hattie Caraway and T. Roy Reid, president of the society, with Mrs. Reid.

Program Expansion Outlined

Expansion of its program to obtain cooperation for postwar reconstruction and to help prevent intolerance now and after the war was announced last night by Dr. Everett R. Clinchy, New York City, president of the National Conference of Christians and Jews.

Conference activity is being increased among schools, colleges, churches and synagogues, Army and Navy bases and in the field of religious education, according to Dr. Clinchy. He pointed out that the conference's program for the armed forces has reached three million men and women in 340 major military centers. Many conferences were held with officers and chaplains, he reported.

As part of the expansion program, new conference offices, with salaried secretaries in charge, have been opened in Boston, Providence, Birmingham and other cities, Dr. Clinchy said that conference roundtables, with year-round programs, are now functioning in 249 population centers, with informal committees in 2000 other communities.

Dr. Andrew W. Gottschall of this city, director of the conference's Southern area, also heads the conference's programs for camps and naval bases.

Community Center Classes Start Tonight

The fall program of classes will start at 8 tonight at the Jewish Community Center with instruction in art, language and dancing, Edward Rosenblum, executive director of the center, announced yesterday.

Miss Florence Frank will teach French classes. Miss Beatrice Gelbman, who was formerly associated with the Irene Kaufman Settlement of Pittsburgh, is the new director of activities who will aid students in selection of courses.

Elections Tomorrow To Give Hint of '44

New York Lieutenant Governor Race, N. J., Kentucky Gubernatorial Votes Claim Interest

By Arthur Hachten
International News Service Staff Writer

Political leaders last night looked to widely scattered elections tomorrow to furnish signposts to the 1944 national elections.

A balancing of claims and counter claims of party leaders seemed to forecast Republican gains—a strengthening of position for next year's presidential race.

Chief interest was focused on the race for the Lieutenant Governorship of New York, and the gubernatorial contests in New Jersey and Kentucky.

Significant sideshows will be the municipal elections in Philadelphia and Detroit. Mississippi will elect a Governor and other State officers, and in Virginia State officers outside of Governor will be chosen.

While the consensus among politicos was that State Senator Joe R. Hanley, Republican, will be elected Lieutenant Governor of New York, to fill a vacancy caused by death, even his most ardent supporters were not predicting a landslide.

The Democratic nominee is Lieut. Gen. William N. Haskell, retired. He also has the indorsement of the American Labor Party.

The main interest of the Nation in New York's race is believed to lie in its bearing upon Governor Dewey's fate in the Republican presidential picture. A defeat for Hanley would be hailed as a blow to Dewey's prestige.

Despite his insistence that he is not a candidate for the presidency and that he intends to serve out his term as governor (it ends in 1946), a thumping victory for Hanley was expected to spur the draft-Dewey movement.

Edge N. J. Favorite

In the New Jersey gubernatorial race Walter E. Edge, 73-year-old former Republican United States Senator, former Ambassador to France and former governor, is believed likely to be elected. Mayor Vincent J. Murphy of Newark, is the Democratic nominee.

Although Gov. Charles Edison (Democrat), and Mayor Frank Hague of Jersey City, have been bitter foes f three years, they managed to negotiate a combination behind Murphy. But the feeling between the Edison and Hague wings of the party is believed to be too bitter to guarantee against defections on election day.

Reports from Kentucky that the Republicans have a good chance to elect former Judge Simeon S. Willis, Ashland attorney, as Governor, perhaps have given Republicans generally more pep than any of the other elections.

However, expert observers of Kentucky politics predict the Democrats' choice, J. Lyter Donaldson, former State Highway Commissioner, will win by a small majority—perhaps 50,000 in a State that usually bowls over GOP nominees by heavy majorities.

Some national interest has been generated by the mayoralty contest in Philadelphia where William C. Bullitt, former Ambassador to Soviet Russia, is running as a Democrat against Acting Mayor Bernard Samuel, Republican.

President Roosevelt has stated he was glad his old-time friend, Bullitt, was running for mayor. The President has also announced he will vote for Haskell in New York.

Max Reinhardt, 'Miracle Man' Of Theater, Dead in N.Y. at 70

World-Recognized For His Directing, Producing Genius

New York, Oct. 31 (INS).—Max Reinhardt, "miracle man" of the theater of two continents, died early today as the result of a stroke. He was 70.

With the world-recognized producing and directing genius when he died were his wife, the European actress, Helene Thimig, and two sons, Gottfried, former M-G-M producer and now in the Navy, and Wolfgang, a Warner Brothers producer.

Mrs. Reinhardt and Wolfgang Reinhardt flew to New York from California when the condition of the ailing impresario became serious. He suffered the stroke three weeks ago, and pneumonia developed 72 hours before his death.

Produced "The Miracle."

Reinhardt, perhaps best known in America as producer of "The Miracle," became a United States citizen in 1940, after many years of "commuting" between America and Europe.

Born near Vienna on September 8, 1873, Reinhardt began his career in Salzburg as a youth and quickly gained renown as the "wonder boy" of the theatrical world.

In 1905 he was established as head of the Deutsches Theater in Berlin. Besides two theaters which he built in Berlin, Reinhardt devoted himself to the Salzburg festivals which drew throngs from all over the world year after year.

His school of the theater at Schoenbrunn outside Vienna was attended by theatrical personalities who included Luise Rainer, Francis Lederer, Emil Jannings, Joseph Schildkraut and Marlene Dietrich.

Hailed as 'Genius'

Reinhardt's Flair for pageantry was given full flower in his productions of "The Miracle" and "The Eternal Road." He was an instant success wherever he went and was hailed as "genius" in Paris, London, Budapest, Berlin, Prague, Copenhagen, Stockholm and elsewhere.

One of Reinhardt's latest successes was the revival of Der Fledermaus under the title "Rosalinda" on Broadway. The light opera rounded out its first year in New York last week and still remains one of the city's biggest hits.

Chinese Guns Blast Japs Along Salween

Chungking, Oct. 31 (AP).—Chinese artillery, nestled in the Kaolikung Mountains on the Salween River front, has inflicted heavy casualties on Japanese invaders seeking to control a big area west of the Salween in the Burma-Yunnan border area, the Chinese high command announced today.

American aircraft again went to the support of the embattled Chinese by blasting away at targets in Indo-China whence the Japanese are supplying their armies in Burma. The planes flung 40 tons of bombs on a large zinc smelting plant at Quangyen, near Haiphong, Indo-China, and demolished an airdrome in the territory of Kwangchowan.

The Chinese said a Japanese detachment had driven southeastward into China's "rice bowl" from Hwajung in Hupeh Province but was repulsed.

Hwajung, north of Tungting Lake, was taken by the Japanese last May when they started a drive from the Yangtze which the Chinese believed was aimed at Chungking. The Chinese repulsed the May drive and estimated the Japanese lost 40,000 men.

Nazis Reported Rushing Men To Red Front

Stockholm, Oct. 31 (AP).—The alarmed Germans are rushing troop reinforcements to the Russian Front from Italy and Norway and are intensifying work on new fortifications in a defense line in Poland, Swiss reports said today.

At least ten German divisions are reported being transported from Genoa via Lyon, France, to the Russian Front. The shift may weaken German preparations for a stand against Allied armies in northern Italy.

Saboteurs are aware of the movement and are hampering transport by blasting raliway lines, the Swiss report added.

Eucharist Group Hears Pope on Radio

London, Oct. 31 (AP).—Making his first radio address since German troops seized Rome and surrounded Vatican City, Pope Pius XII broadcast a message tonight to the Third National Eucharistic Congress at Trujillo, Peru. He did not touch upon political subjects.

The eucharistic congress "is a great consolation to us at a time when so many sorrows are besieging your common father, and when so many of our brethern are being killed in battle," Pope Pius said, speaking from his German-ringed study.

"Harmony and peace can be reached only through Christianity and faith," he declared and "no social justice can thrive in the world without Christ as the source of life."

Pope Pius exhorted his listeners to "unite in God and thus achieve unity in world peace," which he characterized as a "precious gift which has to be prayed for without respite."

Nelson B. Bell About the Showshops

Henceforth at the Earle Usherettes Will Show You

BY ALL THE EVIDENCE, we were a trifle premature a while back in popping off with the disclosure that usherettes had been visible on the floor of the Earle Theater. The visibility part was true enough, but the gals, it now turns out, must have been merely in training preparatory to the big shift that will occur today.

Now, definitely, the Earle has gone from masculine to girl-guides for those who need showing to their pews or to have pointed out to them the rows in which they can tread on the most feet in getting to the inside, center seats. Eighteen of the usherettes are scheduled to take over today—15 to work on the night shift, when the need is greatest, and three during the day.

Sounds simple, but competent ushering requires a bit of doing. To this end, the girls have been in training for the past two weeks, not only familiarizing themselves with the various floor levels of the house, but attending classes in theory and theater management in addition. The "theory" they have studied has been quietly put to practical account during the last performances, when the new staff has acquired a working knowledge of what "seating a house" is all about.

The installation of the feminine corps, of course, has been occasioned by the drafting of the male staff by the armed services and the universal problem of manpower.

There are certain phases of the art of ushering in which an usherette cannot be expected completely to match the equipment of an usher. While Washington audiences are perhaps the most decorous and orderly of any in the United States, there are rare occasions when a recalcitrant customer requires a little "handling"—occasionally physical as well as psychological. With this in mind, the theater managements have made it a practice to man their staffs, as far as possible, with young gentlemen with a bit of athletic prowess—life guards, football players, amateur boxers and the like. Seldom has their muscularity been called into play, but it has been there, if needed in an emergency. The new usherettes, in their trig, blue gabardine uniforms, doubtless will make up in tact and persuasiveness any potential toughness and punch of their predecessors. They will be the first group of their gender in a Warner house since the days of World War I.

To See Selves as Camera Saw Them

Come Thursday, a considerable group of Washington's young women will see themselves on the screen at RKO-Keith's Theater. In conjunction with first local showings of Universal's new Technicolor version of "The Phantom of the Opera," a new release in the "This Is America" series is to be shown under the title of "Children From Mars."

These "children" range in age from 14 to 18 years and are the daughters of officers in the armed forces of the United States comprising the Jango Junior Nurses Corps at Doctors Hospital, where many of the scenes in "Children From Mars" were filmed. The work they do—much of which will be shown on the screen—is so competent that it has met with the wholehearted approbation of the hospital's professional staff and served as an inspiration to youth throughout the country.

On opening day, as many of the Jangos as are not on duty will be found over Fifteenth Street way taking a look at themselves.

As I watched Rolly Rolls clown all over a concert grand piano in the headline spot on the Earle stage bill last Friday, it occurred to me that here was a fine quality of virtuosity being heavily disguised under a thick layer of slapstick. It reminded me of Al Trahan, vaudeville's "Paderoughski" and "the man who made the king laugh"—George V of England that was, and Al really did it. I once put the matter smack up to the Trahan and got an eminently realistic answer for my solicitude. "We all have something deep in our hearts we'd like to do," he said, "but we still have to eat. Pratt falls and roughhouse comedy pay off better than upper-case 'Art.'" Perhaps that's the way it is with Mr. Rolls.

When that story came in the other day about Woody Herman—now headlining the stage bill at Loew's Capitol with his orchestra—and his conversion of his music stands into stamp albums, we paid it no heed beyond the thought that Woody had an imaginative press agent. The fact of the matter is that Woody Herman DID buy $5000 worth of war saving stamps and had them officially canceled so they would have no redemption value. With these he HAS decorated his music stands —solid background of rose-colored 10-cent stamps; standards carried by Treasury Minute Men of green 25-cent stamps and the initials W. H., of 50-cent blues. The Minute Man is the only figure not of stamps. A coat of shellac, and there you are.

Leave it to Olsen and Johnson and that peer of the actor-announcers, Arch McDonald. Arch will be getting the sniff of the theater back into his nostrils tonight by microphoning his WTOP Moon Dial program from the lobby of the National Theater at 11:15 by the clock. Ole and Chic, plus national personalities, will be his guests—pronounced "jests" in the case of the stars.

Frank Tuttle, directing "Rainbow Island," which is "Aloma of the South Seas" all over again, takes time out to wear a harness over his neck and actually pays to have his neck stretched, hoping for a cure for arthritis. His Russian wife is all over the lot asking for help for Russia. On the set are flowers as big as lilac bushes. Dottie Lamour's sarong is a mere scrap, and Eddie Bracken wears a headdress that looks like something left over from Marlene Dietrich. . . . Red Skelton has the only radio contract I know of that has a happiness clause in it. If he's not satisfied, he can quit. If his sponsor isn't, the sponsor can quit, too. I asked why Red didn't take his show to various camps, and his reply was, "My sponsor doesn't believe in it. He think's that's getting publicity out of patriotism." I asked when he was going to marry Muriel Morris. "You tell me," said he. "Can't prevent anybody publishing that we're engaged, but I never announced it—nor did she."

Met Their Match

Betty Hutton and Arturo de Cordova dining at Romanoff's, but not alone. That Latin sure goes in for vitality. Speaking of that, when Tallulah Bankhead was introduced to Betty, she said, "Your vitality frightens me." Both Betty and Arturo came under La Bankhead's spell. Dining with her is like eating with an all-star stage cast. She can imitate, outact, outtalk and outlast anybody. She gave me a one-woman performance of "Skin of Our Teeth." She has four days' lay-off and is catching up on movies. She spends hours a day looking at Betty Grable, Orson Welles and Alice Faye; saw "So Proudly We Hail." and thinks Sonny Tufts a refreshing personality. "Imagine finding a blond giant with a sense of comedy," she said. She is looking forward to seeing "Saratoga Trunk." Gary Cooper is still her favorite movie star, and she hopes for a chance to play opposite him.

[Duffy's Tavern] Gardner [Archie] Leo's Harry Edington's house, then the Edingtons went to New York, telling him he could use their furniture till January. Now they're back, and the Gardners will have an empty house until their furniture can be moved from New York . . . Mike Romanoff is back from an Eastern trip, where he entertained the ladies of the Cushing family for dinner. Mike's gold cigarette case, made famous by a loving inscription from Gertrude Lawrence, is now at the White House, being inscribed by our President. . . . Moss Hart, when he'd written "Winged Victory," contacted Gen. Henry Arnold and asked if he'd like to hear the play. He would. The date was set, and Moss walked into a room in Washington with 380 high-ranking officers waiting to hear it, too.

Pix

The young science of psychiatry has become a rich field for writers or horror-scenarios. A couple of cases in point are the two more-sophisticated-than-usual flesh-crawlers currently at the Pix.

Neither depends upon suggestion of the supernatural for its gooseflesh developments. "The Seventh Victim" is about devil-worshippers, but htey are not in the least sinister. The horror comes in with the suspicion that the central character's psychiatrist is a criminal and a fake. An impressive youngster named Kim Hunter, in her screen debut, plays the leading character with imaginative charm.

The second, "Terror House," is an English product, not first-rate as English horror-films go, but you know how well the English do these things, even when they're not in top form. It is notable for two things. One, the performance of the Heathcliffeish leading actor, James Mason, who becomes very handsome when he smiles. The other is the bitter and outspoken comment on the Spanish War.

Broadway Gazette

New York, Oct. 31.

REALTY DEPT.: Last week two New York press agents, Al Rylander and Sam Geison, completed an outline of a movie based on the life of Bernard Baruch. They wrote to Mr. Baruch and asked his permission to submit this outline to the film studios. They remembered that Mr. Baruch's favorite conference place is a Washington park-bench, and so they addressed their letter "Mr. Baruch, Park Bench No. 1, Washington, D. C." . . . His answer—"No"—arrived within three days.

MICKEY ROONEY

MOVIES: Ludwig Bemelmans, now in Hollywood, witnessed this scene at a party: A beautiful lady waited in the entrance hall for her escort's arrival. Ten of Hollywood's handsomest males immediately surrounded her, but she displayed no interest in them. "I'm waiting for my dream man," she told them. "He said I'm to meet him here" . . . The 10 handsome men pleaded for her attention. "I'll go with you if my dream man is more than an hour late," she promised. They waited the extra hour, but then her dream man arrived and she went off with him—Mickey Rooney.

THEATER: Mayor LaGuardia heard of the exciting opening of Billy Rose's "Carmen Jones" in Philadelphia, and asked Billy whether he'd be interested in putting the show, for four weeks, into New York's new Civic Theater . . . "Not for four weeks," replied Rose. "But I'd do it for four years."

DRAMA DEPT.: Lieut. John Mason Brown, the former drama critic, is the aide to Rear Admiral Alan Goodrich Kirk, commander of our amphibious forces in the Atlantic, who led in the invasion against Sicily . . . Lieut. Brown was the bridge announcer during the invasion, describing the proceedings for the men below decks. His original assignment was as a wind-reader, a job for which a knowledge of calculus is necessary. A naval officer started to give Brown a three-day course in calculus, but then gave it up. The play reviewer then wrote a memo to the admiral: "In my previous profession, we frequently had to use the word 'miscasting.' An obvious example would be to have Paul Robeson play the lily maid of Astolat. Another example is having me be a wind-reader." Lieutenant Brown was relieved, and given the assignment which utilized his talents as a reviewer.

SOCIAL NOTES: Quentin Reynolds told the Overseas Press Club about some of his experiences in Sicily. He was with Gen. Terry Allen during the assault on Troina. The general was uneasy about the number of casualties and the outcome of the important battle. A sergeant came up to the general, slapped him on the back and said: "Don't worry, Terry—we're going to take the gahdam place." . . . "Get that sergeant's name and number," Gen. Terry Allen told his aide . . . "Why? To discipline him?" Reynolds asked. . . . "No," said the general. "To decorate him."

HELP WANTED: Six months ago Nate Beers, assistant to Jed Harris, met the lady who holds a job similar to his at the Theater Guild. Beers told her of Franz Werfel's play, "Jacobowsky and the Colonel," which Harris owned. He described the girl needed for the play, and asked: "If you should see such a girl, please send her to us" . . . A few days ago the lady, at the Guild, found the girl, and sent her to the Harris office. The girl returned with a note from Beers, explaining that the Werfel play now is owned by the Theater Guild.

MUSIC DEPT.: The representative of a movie studio approached Larry Hart, the lyricist and former partner of Composer Richard Rodgers, and discussed a movie to be based on the career of Rodgers and Hart . . . "I wouldn't want this movie done before the war is over and the boats start taking passengers again," Hart told him . . . "But what's war and boats got to do with a movie about you?" the movie man asked . . . "Because on the day such a movie is released," Hart explained, "I'd want to be on the first boat leaving for Europe."

FOREIGN DISPATCH: Patrick Maitland, the British war correspondent now visiting here, tells of the interview he had with Boris of Bulgaria, a few years ago. After the two-hour session, they both started to leave. "Wait, young man. Let me leave first," Boris told him. "One of these days someone is going to assassinate me, and I don't want anyone else to be mistaken for me."

Trans-Lux

"Broadway Dimout," the "This Is America" release occupying the top spot among the short subjects on the new bill at the Trans-Lux Theater, just barely noses in under the wire of public interest. With the ban on lights drastically modified, the film loses a bit of its point in the outdoor sequences, but remains a lively exhibit in its indoor manifestations.

It is crowded close by "These Are Men," the British Ministry of Information subject, dealing with the Nazi leaders who stand indicted, if not already condemned and sentenced, at the bar of public opinion. For the sports fans, "Kings of Basketball," with Bill Stern delivering the commentary, will hold first place.

The news coverage, as usual, is world-wide and as complete as time and great distances will permit. Among many other "clips," the Navy reports on two years of war and Italian fliers take off with the Allies. On the lighter side is the Technicolor cartoon, "Imagination," to maintain a nice balance.

The Washington Merry-Go-Round

By Drew Pearson

FORTHRIGHT AMBASSADOR George Messersmith, first United States diplomat to report the real lowdown on Hitler, has sent some confidential reports to the State Department about the wholesome anti-Nazi influence King Carol and Mme. Lupescu, now in Mexico City, could exercise over Rumanians.

Rumania, with its tremendous oil supplies, has become one of the key military spots in Europe, and the Allied high command is anxious to get it out of the war. This, plus the real friends King Carol has made among United States Congressmen and officials visiting Mexico, has led to a move to bring him into the USA.

Previous opposition was based on Carol's and Lupescu's relations. However, the King is now married to the woman he always loved, has been faithful to her for 20 years.

Carol's Message

Meanwhile the Rumanian King has sent this writer his personal view on Nazism, which he consistently fought, and his hope for democracy:

'For three years and a month I have seen history go by my door as I have lived awaiting the day when I would be able to serve the cause of democracy and the Allied governments. I had hoped long before this that I would have been invited to play a part in hurrying the day of victory—and the right kind of peace.

"The voices and the energies of my 20 million people should no longer be wasted; those voices and energies can be turned into a tide of steel against the Germans, insuring the decisive role Rumania can and will play on the side of the Allies.

"I have been willing for three years and a month—since the day I was forced into exile—to play my part in liberating my people from the iron collar of Nazism.

"As the first monarch to fight Nazism and fight it to the day when death was imminent I had believed I would have been called to continue in the fight.

"For my open defiance of Nazism and Fascism, and all they stood for, I had expected more understanding.

"Still anxious to serve and especially in the darker hours that lie ahead for my country and my people, I have been quietly and patiently awaiting the call that surely must come if we are to have free peoples and free governments everywhere.

"I fought Nazism and would not bow to the demands of Hitler.

"I left only when Nazi gunfire was turned upon me.

"I can help save Rumania for itself and for the democracies of the world.

"My only personal ambition is to be of service; to help in the formation of a free Rumanian government to take its rightful place along side the the other free governments of the world."

STORY BEHIND the War Labor Board's rejection of John L. Lewis' mine wage agreement with Illinois operators, which would have netted the miners about $1.50 extra a day, is that WLB Chairman William Davis at first favored approving the agreement, almost in full. But he was talked out of it by Economic Czar Fred Vinson.

At a secret meeting with Lewis and other WLB members, Davis strongly indicated that the board would okay the Illinois agreement, with one or two changes. Lewis was so confident after this meeting that he immediately wired the coal strikers in Alabama to return to work.

But a few days later, Davis and public members of the WLB were summoned to the White House for a confab with Vinson and his chief, James F. Byrnes, at which the WLB officials were quickly stripped of any notions they may have had of giving $1.50 extra to to the miners.

Vinson laid down the law in bare-knuckled terms. He said the portal-to-portal clause in the Illinois agreement, which would give straight time for 45 minutes a day —or 75 cents additional—for the time the miners spend entering and leaving the pits, was inflationary. Vinson let it be known that he would veto the agreement if the WLB approved it in this form.

When this was reported at a subsequent meeting of the full WLB board, labor members were so enraged they threatened to walk out of the meeting. However, Davis and the public members felt they had no recourse but to follow the ukase laid down by Judge Vinson and Byrnes.

Congress Cuts Expenses

CONGRESS IS REALLY getting economy-minded. Executive departments are in for a rough jolt when the $1,200,000,000 deficiency appropriation for war spending is reported by the House Appropriations Committee.

This measure will see the biggest "economy" in any appropriation bill since Roosevelt became President—a cut of at least 60 per cent, possibly 75 per cent.

Inside fact is that the Office of War Information came within a hair's breadth of being abolished entirely. Committee Republicans, led by anti-Roosevelt Representative John Taber of New York, were against giving Elmer Davis' OWI any of his five-million-dollar request. This would have meant complete demolition of the Government's vital war propaganda program.

However, committee Democrats were firmly opposed and finally won out. A compromise OWI appropriation of about four million dollars is likely. There will also be a big slash, probably around 60 per cent, in the 25-million-dollar deficiency request of the Federal Housing Administration.

No extra funds will be approved for the Farm Security Administration, which has requested approximately 44 million dollars to stimulate war food production among little farmers. Instead, the FSA will be told to await the regular Agriculture Department appropriation for further funds.

This will hold up vital FSA functions for months and may well mean the abolition of the Government's farm security and rehabilitation program unless the Senate voids the House committee's action. The Appropriation Committee also cut a Labor Department deficiency request to the bone and will deny large sums to the War and Navy Departments until they have used up surplus funds on hand.

The War and Navy Departments, incidentally, are the bureaus where real money can be saved.

2 Come to Grief

Freedom Brief for 8 Schoolboys

Less than six hours after nine boys escaped from the National Training School Saturday night, two of them were taken into custody early yesterday following the theft of an automobile and two sets of men's clothing. Two others were seized by police; four gave up voluntarily and returned to the institution and one remained at liberty last night.

The two who took the clothes, police said, smashed a kitchen window at the home of Herman H. Allen at 3042 Monroe st. ne. Clothes were exchanged for shirts, ties and suits from Allen's wardrobe. Next a sedan was removed from in front of 3619 24th st. ne., and driven to the 4800 block of South Dakota ave. ne., according to police.

At this point the street is a dead-end. Trying to back away, the driver tangled with a parked car. A neighbor called police of the Twelfth Precinct and the car's occupants were seized walking down the street.

School Superintendent Harold E. Hegstrom said that there is nothing but the "honor system" to prevent boys at the school from walking away at any time. He said he regretted the publicity given the number of boys who have escaped from the school in the past few months.

"No one ever says anything about the boys who are staying here, and who are succeeding. This is not a reformatory. It is strictly a boys' school. And it's the boys who are making good here who are on the spot."

Hegstrom emphasized that the rate of escapes at the school is far below the rate at similar institutions in the Eastern Seaboard area.

"We have at the school at the present time," he said, "422 boys from all over the country, who have been turned over to us by the Department of Justice. Hundreds of our "postgraduates" are now in the armed services and there have been very few who have walked out of the school before they should have."

"We've had a tremendous turnover in our staff," he continued, "but we have begun to add former servicemen to the group, and so are better off than we were." He said that at least one former sailor, who was honorably discharged from the Navy, after being twice torpedoed, and who reached port safely, is now employed at the school.

Premier Says He'll Ask Count Sforza To Take Portfolio

By the Associated Press

The Berlin radio, quoting a dispatch from Bologna, said yesterday that Benito Mussolini's new republican Fascist regime has demanded the death penalty for King Vittorio Emanuele, Premier Pietro Badoglio, Gen. Vittorio Ambrosio, former Italian chief of staff, and Gen. Mario Roatta, Badoglio's army chief.

The same punishment was demanded for all 19 members of the Fascist grand council who voted Mussolini's ouster as premier, and for all generals and admirals who supported Badoglio, the broadcast continued.

It did not say whether Mussolini attended the Bologna meeting.

Sforza Cooperative

Naples, Oct. 31 (AP).—Count Carlo Sforza, former Italian foreign minister, indicated today his willingness to give Premier Pietro Badoglio "my parallel collaboration" in a government, but implied he would not join any regime unless King Vittorio Emmanuele abdicated.

Sforza's statement was made after Badoglio had said he intended asking the count to enter a proposed coalition government representing all sections of political opinion, including Communism.

Without specific reference to the sovereign, Sforza said "it will be exceedingly difficult to revive the fighting spirit of the Italian people if we don't give them some striking evidence that all links with the Fascists are broken."

Sforza, who arrived in Italy recently from the United States, has the backing of the Action Party, which advocates wide economic and social reforms.

Badoglio arrived in Naples with American Minister Robert Murphy and British Minister Robert MacMillan, who conferred with Italian political leaders. The premier said today the new government would be pledged to continue the war until the Germans are expelled from all Italy.

"Then I intend to resign and become a soldier again," he declared.

Badoglio, who conferred with representatives of all parties asking them to name candidates for offices, said he wanted Sforza to take some portfolio "because he is a great personality and an old friend of mine."

He expressed the belief that Benedetto Croce, the philosopher, was too frail for an active post and said his temperament was better suited to writing philosophy. He doubted, he said, that Croce would accept if a portfolio were offered.

Badoglio said he had asked the Allied military commanders "to permit Italian troops to fight beside Allied soldiers," and expressed the belief that Alpine units would be particularly useful in the terrain still ahead.

Asserting that King Vittorio Emanuele approved the type of government he is planning to form, Badoglio declined to comment on the suggestion of a regency—which Croce strongly favors—for the Prince of Naples, the 6-year-old son of Crown Prince Umberto.

(The Swiss radio quoted Badoglio as saying that "an important Italian motorized fighting unit, equipped with German and Italian material, is about to go into action on the side of Montgomery's and Clark's troops.") idea that Argentina should break with the Axis so as to get arms from Washington.

Peron is quoted as saying "Argentina is no longer going to be kicked around by Washington and London." He is reported to have picked all of Ramirez's cabinet. He also is credited with having jockeyed other ministers about until Vice President Edelmiro J. Farrell, a general and former minister of war, has superseded Foreign Minister Alberto Gilbert as the most important visible figure in the government. Peron's official position is undersecretary of war.

Ramirez's position is said to have become so humiliating that he has determined to undergo an operation as an excuse to get out of the presidency.

Peron is said to be grooming Farrell to succeed Ramirez, with the idea of ultimately assuming the presidency himself as the final leader of the military regime.

War Fund Totals 71.5% of Quota

Community War Fund because you folks saved my life not so long ago," said a red-headed Marine sergeant as he turned over a $10 check to Arlington headquarters.

As just citizen Charles Pieper, 4 years ago, the fund aided him with hospital and doctor's care when he was ill with the flu. Home on furlough after nine months in the South Pacific, Sergeant Pieper noted, "You don't know what it means to us on the front to have all of you behind us."

Money saved for the fund throughout the past year finally came to headquarters, the heaviest donation in weight. Contained in a sizable glass bank were the fees of a woman notary public.

A former Tariff Commission employe, recently inducted into service, walked into the commission to make his contribution while on furlough. It was $25, and he said, "It's just a small payment for the services I've alreday received through the USO."

Then there was the retired Government worker who sent in $35 to be added to the commission's quota—because she "had not been solicited and did not want to be left out."

Divisions to Make Fifth Report Today

All out to meet its $4,800,000 goal in its fifth campaign week, the Community War Fund will have its fifth general report meeting of all divisions today at 12:30 p. m. in the "Hall of Flags," United States Chamber of Commerce.

Returns solicited over the weekend will be reported by all eight divisions, including nearby counties.

Leading the field in percentage achieved to date is the Advance Gifts Division, with 81.9 per cent of its quota for $450,515.54. Business and finance is second with 75 per cent raised—$1,019,591.23.

Responsible for half of the Washington quota, the Government division had $1,796,056.50 in returns for 74.84 per cent of its quota. Metropolitan, which began soliciting late in the campaign, had climbed to 45.89 per cent of its quota with a total of $137,664.05 and is averaging $14 per pledge.

China Due to Bar Exploiters

Economic or political exploitation by foreign lenders will not be tolerated by China after the war, and that country looks forward to cooperation with its present Allies on a basis of equality, the Foreign Policy Association said yesterday in a survey of Chinese public opinion. The survey was prepared by three Chinese now in this country studying American postwar thinking.

Dr. Ching-chao Wu, former editor in chief of the Chungking New Economist, in his survey of Chinese internal economic development, said that China will be preoccupied with the closely related problems of industrialization and agrarian reform in the postwar period.

"In the realm of agrarian reform . . . the group thinks that the most serious problem in our rural districts is that of landlordism and tenancy. Another group considers that the core of the Chinese agrarian problem is the small size of the Chinese farm, which averages only 3½ acres—in some provinces less than 2 acres.

"More cultivated land should be brought under the plow, and a conscious attempt made to redistribute the population so that farmers may be induced to leave overpopulated areas and settle in less densely inhabited districts. More opportunities should be created for making a living by methods other than farming. . . ."

As for industrialization, Dr. Wu pointed out that "whether China should after the war develop its industries with more emphasis on guns or butter has been hotly debated. . . . It is again a choice between the Soviet and the American pattern."

In connection with China's position in world economy, Dr. Chohming Li, former professor of economics at Hankai University, Chungking, said that China will welcome the aid of foreign capital in its gigantic task of reconstruction, but on terms that carry no threat of imperialistic exploitation of its resources and that acknowledge its emergence as an equal of the advanced industrial nations of the West.

"In the first place," he wrote, "all postwar foreign investments in China must be purged of imperialistic motives. Foreign lending as a means of economic or political exploitation will no longer find any place in China.

"Second, all foreign capital in China must be subject to Chinese laws and jurisdiction. There will, of course, be no discrimination among foreign investors. . . .

"Finally, foreign investments must not be taken at any time as a pretext for encroachment or infringement by other nations on China's sovereign rights. Should a clash occur between its sovereign rights and the rights of foreign investors, whether private or governmental, the former must be given precedence in accordance with international law and justice."

In regard to China's postwar foreign policy, Prof. Yuan Chen, member of the People's Political Council, declared that "with the abolition of unequal treaties, the principal obstacle in the way of Chinese-American friendship has been removed.

"But there is yet another impediment, the Chinese exclusion laws, which looms larger and larger as time goes on. The practical significance of these laws is slight, but their moral effect is very great, as the Chinese consider them a standing symbol of the much attacked doctrine of racial inequality which should have no place in a brave new world.

"The path of Chinese and British friendship will be somewhat less smooth, since British interests and commitments in the Far East are much more widespread and of much longer standing than those of the United States. It is to be hoped that British statesmanship will see the wisdom of making a magnificent gesture by returning Hongkong and Kowloon to China, thus laying the foundation of a lasting friendship between the two nations. A declaration by the British government that it seeks no control over Tibet, a Chinese territory, would further clear the air and increase good will between the two peoples."

De Marigny's Mother-in-Law To Aid Crown

Nassau, Bahamas, Oct. 31 (AP).—Lady Eunice Oakes, the Australian beauty who befriended Sir Harry Oakes when he was a wandering prospector and who was claimed as a bride once he struck it rich, will testify this week against the son-in-law charged with the murder of her husband.

Aged and broken since Sir Harry's beaten and burned body was found last July, she will take the witness stand to tell of the ill fortune which pursued her family after dashing, twice-divorced Alfred de Marigny married the eldest Oakes daughter, Nancy.

The widow is the most important of 12 crown witnesses remaining to be heard. She appeared against De Marigny at a highly emotional session of a preliminary hearing, where she encountered Nancy, who is firm in her faith in De Marigny's innocence, and both wept.

Sobbing, Lady Oakes told of the shock with which she and Sir Harry received the news of Nancy's marriage. They decided to make the best of it and put on a bold front, she related.

Then Nancy became gravely ill in Mexico and the parents rushed to her.

There was a break between Sir Harry and De Marigny, Lady Oakes said, when Nancy became pregnant before she was recovered fully, and while she was facing a series of operations to cure a mouth infection. When De Marigny entered a hospital room next to that occupied by Nancy, the widow added, Sir Harry threatened to "kick him out."

Meanwhile, there was much discussion in Nassau of Defense Attorney Godfrey S. Higgs' suggestion yesterday that two Miami policemen—Capts. James O. Barker and E. W. Melchen—faked exhibit J, the impression of De Marigny's little right finger which Barker said was found on a bedscreen in the death room.

Some said such an attack on officers called in to assist in the solving of a case is unparalleled here. Barker calmly denied there was any fraud.

U. S. Newspaper Born in Dugout In Free China

Chungking, Oct. 31 (AP).—In a damp, rough-hewn dugout, wheezy Chinese-made presses brought here from Hankow today coughed out the first American newspaper published in Free China—the Chungking edition of the Shanghai Evening Post and Mercury, an eight-page, hand-set weekly tabloid.

The paper is owned by American interests in New York headed by Cornelius Starr.

Among advertisements was one by the China National Aviation Corp. inviting clients to "attend the opening of its new, modern airport at Shanghai—exact date will be announced later."

The paper is edited by Frederick B. Opper of New Rochelle, N. Y., who was imprisoned in Shanghai by the Japanese after the outbreak of war and later repatriated.

Coal Truce Ends; More Miners Out allowance for underground travel time as such.

Likewise, the policy committee will have before it WLB's rejection of a $2 a day increase demanded for anthracite miners, and the granting, instead, of an increase of 32.2 cents a day and other concessions amounting to 20 to 25 cents a day.

President Roosevelt, in a statement Saturday, said he believed the board's offer would be accepted. But he added that "if I am mistaken and the miners do not accept the board's proposals, I shall take decisive action to see that coal is mined."

Following Mr. Roosevelt's suggestion, the board announced that it had no objection to insertion in a new contract of a clause stipulating that "in no case shall a miner receive for a day's work less than he would have received from his productive work at the straight-time hourly rate under the old contract."

UMW Chief John L. Lewis had said the WLB recommendation would mean a cut in hourly rates of pay.

The October 31 deadline was set by Lewis in ordering miners back to work last June following seizure of the mines as a result of the third general strike due to absence of a new contract to replace the one that expired last spring. The miners originally demanded a $2-a-day pay boost.

Another condition to keep the men working during negotiations was implied by Lewis—continued Federal operation of the mines until a contract was agreed on. The last of the properties were returned to the owners several weeks ago under requirements of the Smith-Connally Antistrike Act.

The Associated Press reported from Charleston, W. Va., that while West Virginia waited for final word from Lewis, its biggest industry prepared to close down again with the State's 130,000 bituminous coal miners ready to begin their fourth holiday in seven months.

The "No-work-tomorrow" word was spread at local union meetings throughout the coal fields.

Operators' associations were unanimous in the view that virtually all of West Virginia's 600-odd bituminous mines would be idle today, while district union representatives already had practically abandoned efforts to keep the men at work.

The union apathy followed Lewis' message to district leaders interpreting the War Labor Board proposal of a $1.12½ daily wage increase as actually meaning lower pay rates.

On Saturday, approximately 7000 more miners, mostly in McDowell County, joined the walkout, swelling the ranks of idle to more than 16,500.

Hundreds more failed to report for the third Saturday shift at time and a half pay rates Saturday night. In McDowell alone it was estimated that 10,000 of that county's 25,000 miners were already idle at midnight.

Virginia Miners Balky

From St. Charles, Va., the Associated Press also reported that at the southwest Virginia coal fields indications were that few union miners would report to their jobs Monday pending settlement of the wage dispute.

This would mean that coal production would cease in 42 of Virginia's 44 mines. The Dante and Clinchco mines, which have some 4000 nonunion workers, are expected to be in operation as usual.

Mrs. H. L. Hunter, assistant secretary of the Virginia Coal Operators Association, said tonight that although the association had no way of determining the extent of work stoppage tomorrow she felt certain that an insufficient number of UMW men would report to operate.

I. L. Bennett, president of the Bonny Blue local, said "nothing short of a new contract would return the miners to work.

Tributes Paid to Retired Community House Head

Tributes were paid Mrs. Alma J. Scott, retired head of the Southwest Community House, last night at Randall Junior High School, by representatives of various social agencies. The Rev. B. H. Whiting was master of ceremonies, and Mrs. Minnie King general chairman.

Herbert Willett, jr., executive director of the Community War Fund, commended Mrs. Scott as an outstanding social worker during the last quarter century. Mrs. Julia West Hamilton, president of the Phyllis Wheatley YWCA, and Dr. Mordecai W. Johnson, president of Howard University, gave exposition of her work as a club woman and university alumnus.

Postal Workers Hear Civil Liberties Chief

Victor W. Rotnem, chief of the Civil Liberties Section of the Department of Justice, was the principal speaker last night at the thirtieth anniversary celebration of the National Alliance of Postal Employes, held at the Asbury Methodist Church.

He cited numerous recent cases under Civil Rights statutes which have been prosecuted in various sections of the country, with convictions following, as a result of which complaints of violation of civil rights have fallen off approximately 80 per cent.

Congress And Treasury

According to rumor, Randolph E. Paul, general counsel and chief tax expert of the Treasury, is about to resign because the Ways and Means Committee has rejected the Treasury's latest tax program. Mr. Paul has good reason to feel dissatisfied. For the cavalier treatment accorded the Treasury's most recent proposals follows repeated rebuffs and rejections of its recommendations.

The evidence points unmistakably to the lack of a friendly and close working accord between the Treasury and the congressional committees responsible for the drafting of tax bills. Something is obviously wrong with the procedure that has been followed. To formulate complicated tax programs that legislators sweep aside impatiently is not only futile, it is also shockingly wasteful of the time and labor of the Treasury's tax experts and their assistants. That is not to say that the latest Treasury program deserved a better fate. It was inadequate both because of its tender handling of the great masses of wage-earning voters and because of its ill-balanced emphasis on increased taxation of already heavily taxed higher-income groups. But an immense amount of painstaking and informed labor had been expended on the program. That difficult task ought not to have been undertaken without reference to the wishes of Congress.

The Treasury's responsibility is not merely that of presenting a tax program pleasing to its own experts. It is more important to formulate a program that can elicit affirmative action from Congress. That entails exploratory work to find out what Congress will stand for as well as persuasive preliminary approaches, with a view to putting prejudiced members of Congress in a more open frame of mind.

As matters now stand, the Treasury experts appear to be regarded as interfering outsiders to be put in their places, while Congress turns increasingly to its own staff of experts for guidance. Given such an attitude, it is not surprising that the Treasury should find its recommendations ignored and its labors futile. Whether Mr. Paul goes or stays, the situation is not likely to be improved, until Congress and the Treasury manifest willingness to work in concert instead of at cross purposes.

Health Front

Health authorities in New York the other day reported an increase of approximately 8 per cent, during the first nine months of this year, in the death rate among civilians in that city. This is a tendency that appears characteristic of the whole country, where, indeed, the increase is slightly higher than in New York. Undoubtedly, war conditions are to some extent responsible, though other factors, such as the removal of so many young men in their 20's and early 30's from the general population, thereby increasing the proportion of the old and very young, must be considered.

Deaths from infantile paralysis and cerebro-spinal meningitis have doubled and even tripled in some places. Both these diseases have been epidemic this year in many parts of the country. It is unlikely, however, that these epidemics affecting a very small proportion of the whole population have had more than a slight influence on the general rate. Much more significant, perhaps, is the increase in deaths from penumonia, which in New York and about two-thirds of the entire country, rose by 21.9 per cent. Undoubtedly the factors here at work are congested living quarters, crowded streetcars, buses and trains and all the familiar phenomena of life in the great war centers, which have inevitably favored the spread of respiratory infections.

Taking all these factors into account, however, the general health situation is not unfavorable for wartime. Some form of pestilence has been an inevitable accompaniment of all great wars, but there is much hope that this time we may escape without it. There is apparently no sign yet, here or abroad, of any foci of pestilence which might grow to world-wide proportions, as did the terrible influenza of 1918-19. Sporadic reports from various war zones suggest a steady increase in that familiar scourge of armies and of war-shocked peoples, typhus fever. The general hunger and [illegible]nization of life in the occupied countries, no doubt in Germany itself since the bombings, seem highly favorable to this disease. But where public services, and particularly the water supply, remain undisrupted, typhus may be considered a controllable disease. And though famine and pestilence have seldom been separated in the past, there is nothing as yet beyond the historical association itself, to suggest that any pestilence of possible pandemic proportions is now developing in the famine-stricken parts of Asia.

Oil For War

There are a number of good reasons for applauding Stabilization Director Vinson's decision to uphold the OPA in its denial of higher prices for crude oil. Foremost of these is the necessity, to use Judge Vinson's words, of keeping "faith with the unnumbered millions of wage earners, producers and merchants whose wages and prices have been stabilized." An increase in crude oil prices would be comparable to throwing a brick into a pond. It would send ripples of inflation throughout our economic system. Such an expedient could be justified only as a last resort in the struggle to get ample oil produced for war purposes.

Scarcely less important is the fact that this decision will encourage the use of more foreign oil for war purposes. It is an unquestioned fact that we have been drawing a disproportionate share of the petroleum products needed to fight the war from American wells. That complaint brought back by the globe-circling Senators is well founded. But it is certainly nothing new to the men who are directing our war effort in this field. They have been working for many months to increase the flow of foreign oil to the battle fronts, and their efforts are now bearing fruit. This fact gives special weight to the conclusion of Judge Vinson and the OPA that petroleum prices should not be raised in order to encourage greater domestic production.

No lack of foreign oil brought about the heavy draft upon American supplies. Rather it was a lack of refining facilities and transportation. When our tankers were comparatively few in number and Germany's submarine warfare was effective, it became impracticable to move crude oil from the Caribbean area to East Coast refineries. Now our fleet of tankers has been greatly enlarged and some Caribbean refineries have been modified for the production of high-octane gasoline so that increasing military demands may be met in part from that source. New refining plants designed to meet military requirements are also coming into production in the Persian Gulf area. When Judge Vinson suggested increasing reliance on foreign oil for war purposes, therefore, he was not merely indulging in wishful thinking.

Fuller use of idle productive capacity in Texas should also be possible because of improved transportation facilities. Judge Vinson also suggests increased drilling in known oil-bearing strata in preference to wildcatting. But this does not indicate that speculative drilling has been abandoned for the duration. On the contrary, more wildcat wells have been drilled this year than ever before. And some of the new fields appear to be very promising. Apparently there is some loss of oil (although it may not be permanent) because of premature abandonment of old wells before they can be completely drained. Judge Vinson has directed Secretary Ickes to suggest ways and means of keeping these marginal wells in production without a price increase. If oil can be kept flowing into military and essential civilian use in ample quantities by these various methods, they will prove far more satisfactory than a price increase.

Beyond Duty

In a Navy Day address Rear Admiral C. H. Woodward told a story about a young naval pilot, Lieut. (j.g.) Paul Baker, who gave up his life in order to save his ship, the aircraft carrier Lexington. After the Lexington's fliers had knocked out three enemy aircraft carriers at Tulagi, Baker—who himself had managed to down five Japanese planes—was hovering over his ship, his gasoline tank nearly empty, awaiting the signal to land. Suddenly ten Japanese planes approached overhead. It was feared they might make a suicide attack on the Lexington. Baker was ordered via radio to turn off his landing lights and under no conditions to attempt a landing.

Said Admiral Woodward: "He sized up the situation instantly. During the radio exchange the Japs had located his position and were closing in. Without hesitation he turned his plane away from the carrier and headed for the open sea, luring the Japs after him. The men aboard the Lexington saw his plane disappear into the night, deliberately facing certain death at the hands of the enemy or the ocean to make certain that his carrier was safe."

You wonder what went on inside the mind of a man in such a situation. All we know is what didn't happen inside it. Apparently he didn't take the time to figure out that his position was grossly inequitable, yet it was. Through no fault of his, he alone was in the air after all his fellow aviators had landed safely on the carrier's deck. His contract with the Navy certainly carried no specification for suicide. This young fellow Baker, if he had thought about it, would have been amply justified in a bitter sense of grievance. Why on earth should he have been singled out to take the rap for the entire crew of the Lexington?

Well, evidently he didn't see the situation in just these terms. Perhaps he sized it up very simply and concluded that this was tough luck but a part of his job. Maybe he decided that his agreement with the Navy, while not specific, committed him to "the last full measure of devotion." Anyway, he gave it. And what he gave must have had meaning for him, must have given him in return a sense of purpose and fulfillment. The rest of us, of course, will applaud what he did. But we might do something more to give meaning to Baker's death. We might ask ourselves, in case we feel aggrieved or victimized by the way the chips have fallen in this war, whether, in our individual compacts with the Government of the United States, we have been willing to give something more than is clearly nominated in the bond.

Pat From Pravda

One concrete consequence of the Moscow parley has been the adoption of a far friendlier tone by the Soviet press toward Britain and the United States. Clamor for a second front has virtually ceased since Messrs. Hull and Eden arrived in Russia. In its place there have appeared in some of the government-controlled newspapers rather generous expressions of appreciation for the part played by the Soviet Union's allies in the common struggle against Hitlerism.

On Saturday Pravda, for example, printed three slogans chosen by the Communist Party's Central Committee to celebrate the approaching twenty-sixth anniversary of the revolution. These slogans cite, first, "the victory of the Anglo-Soviet-American fighting alliance;" second, "the glorious Anglo-American troops fighting against German fascists on Italian territory;" third, the "pilots of the Anglo-American air force who are dealing blows at the vital centers of fascist Germany." Such tributes bespeak an attitude which must afford cold comfort to Dr. Goebbels whose hopes have rested on the possibility of a split among the United Nations. They suggest that the statesmen assembled in Moscow are in full accord, at least as to fundamentals, and wholehearted in their common determination to get on with the winning of the war.

Pravda also took occasion to print a detailed dispatch on President Roosevelt's press conference assertion that the Moscow meeting has been a tremendous success. It is reported from Moscow that the President's remarks made a most favorable impression there. Evidently the Russians are no less desirious of unity than we. It is well that British and American statesmen received Soviet protestations concerning the opening of a second front tolerantly and patiently, instead of replying to them with umbrage and indignation. Perhaps a soft answer literally turns away wrath. Whatever the specific agreements entered into at Moscow, we seem, at any rate, to have achieved a new and helpful spirit of cordiality with the Soviet Union.

Dangerous Precedent

Comptroller General Lindsay Warren was no doubt confronted by a very real dilemma when called upon to decide whether the Government would enter into a valid contract with a concern that refused to agree not to discriminate against any employe because of race, creed, color or national origin. But his solution of it has raised an even more serious dilemma for the Government. His ruling that the executive antidiscrimination order is a "directive" instead of a mandatory order raises legal issues which might better have been referred to the Attorney General. For the ruling threatens to take away from the Fair Employment Practice Committee one of the few weapons it possesses for giving effect to the President's order.

Under the most favorable conditions the FEPC has a difficult assignment calling for the exercise of sound judgment and diplomacy in dealing with nonconformists. Racial discrimination cannot be eliminated overnight. It can only be overcome gradually and always with due allowance for the social and economic effect of changes in respect to hiring practices. But progress toward the desired goal has been made, and it can be hastened if contractors know that the Government authorities are prepared to insist upon a nondiscriminatory hiring policy whenever and wherever feasible. The fancied obstacles to such a policy are apt to vanish if contractors face the loss of lucrative contracts because of refusal to follow the presidential directive.

Unfortunately the Comptroller General's ruling is likely to encourage contractors to follow the example set by the Southwestern Bell Telephone Co. in refusing to sign a contract containing the antidiscrimination clause. Since the recalcitrant telephone company is a sole supplier of needed services, it has the upper hand in this instance, and was able to force the issue. But one cannot help feeling that the case should have been handled more discreetly, with avoidance of undue publicity until the Attorney General had been afforded opportunity to pass upon the Comptroller General's ruling.

SPELL AGAINST EVIL THINGS

Let Lady Nicotine, the suave enchantress
Whose limbecks brew the balms to heal the smarts
Of all the ancient hurts that man inherits:
Ingratitudes and broken heads and hearts,

Let Lady Nicotine, who knows the philtres
That ease such banes as never can be cured,
Show how the ills that cannot be avoided
May be diminished, softened and endured.

There will be time—and time enough—for thinking
Of all man's wrongs since first the fruit was ripe
On the Forbidden Tree in Eden's Garden—
The wise man holds his peace—and smokes his pipe.

Farmyard Fable

By Mark Sullivan

Study In Futility

Avondale, Chester Co., Pa.—The other day, following an October custom immemorial on this old farm, we killed a beef. After treating and storing the eatable parts, and taking the entrails to the garden to serve as fertilizer for next year's vegetables, there remained a useless skull. This was taken to the edge of a field, some distance from the farm buildings. There, almost before the skull was cold, the turkey buzzards discovered it.

By what magic of sight or smell, and which of the two senses the buzzards most rely upon, I have never known. Hundreds of times since I was a boy here, I have seen the sky clear and void as far as eye could reach—a distance, I suppose, of four or five miles. Then, high in the upper air, or over the distant horizon, would appear a slowly moving spot which, gradually approaching, would become visible as a buzzard. Gracefully circling and spiraling, it would light upon a fence or tree. Then, awkward in its final descent, it would flop down to a spot where its remarkable senses had detected something as small as a dead rabbit, not noticeable to human senses for more than 50 yards.

Whether the buzzard had detected the bit of carrion while still miles away, or whether its early circling and spiraling had been a scouting expedition, I do not know. Nor is the question answered, but rather made more puzzling, by the fact that within half an hour other buzzards would gather. Had they been watching the first buzzard, to follow him? Or did they, on their own account, discover the same trove?

DESCENT of the buzzards upon the beef skull aroused the fierce resentment of big Buddy, the Newfoundland dog who guards the farm. Ordinarily an animal of great good nature and deep inertia, he now became angrily energetic in detense of that empty skull. Not that the skull was any good to him. By no means could Buddy's heavy jaws poke into the eye sockets and other orifices of the skull, to get the bits of meat—which the buzzards, with their long, narrow beaks, could reach and find delectable. Buddy's action was sheer dog-in-the-manger.

All day long, Buddy would dash at the buzzards and they would flop slowly off to nearby trees. Always Buddy would follow. Presently he would retire a little way toward the farm buildings. Thereupon the buzzards would again descend toward the skull. Hour after hour the battle went on—an alternation of attack and retirement by Buddy, retirement and redescent by the buzzards.

In the military strategy of the contest, Buddy seemed to lack understanding of a fundamental principle. He seemed never to grasp that, as respects mobility, a land-based force is under a permanent handicap as against an air force; that while a land-based force can successfully defend its position, it cannot hope ever to surround and capture an airborne enemy. Each time that Buddy dashed at the buzzards, he seemed still to hope that this time he would get one.

TOWARD SUNSET, both combatants left for the night—Buddy to supper at the farmhouse and to bed in the warm hollow he has trampled for himself in the haymow. Where the buzzards went and what is their customary habit—whether they pass the night in trees nearby the carrion or go miles back to their permanent roosts—I do not know. Nor have I ever known where their permanent roost may be, though as a boy I spent many an hour wondering about it. I supposed it was far away and somewhere eerie—perhaps in the murky, wooded gorges along the Susquehanna, some 25 miles to the west.

Next morning early, the buzzards came back. Notice of their approach did not come from them—the only sound they make is a low, hoarse hiss. But the crows—gossips and kibitzers of the countryside—having watched with excited delight the battle the day before, announced return of the buzzards with a wild raucous cawing that brought Buddy dashing from his hay-mow snuggery.

Day after day the battle went on—until the warm Indian summer sun, drying out the skull, left nothing to battle about. While the combatants fought, the booty shriveled and evaporated. Never, I think, had any buzzard got so much as a single shred of meat into his craw. Neither to the buzzards nor to Buddy had the long exertion profited anything tangible. Buddy may have felt the spiritual satisfaction of having fought for a principle, of having repelled an aggressor.

Appreciation

A word of appreciation should be expressed for the efficiency with which Ration Book 4 was distributed. Obtaining my book at Jefferson Junior High School was a matter of ten minutes or less. Teachers and students were courteous and helpful.

It occurred to me that this opportunity to perform a patriotic service gave the students a genuine educational experience in democracy-at-work. No doubt these students will remember "the days we helped issue the ration books" long after they have forgotten the routine class work of other days.

Teamwork

By Paul Schubert

Major And Minor

WE AND our Allies learned teamwork the hard way.

At first none of us respected each other very much. In 1941 both the British and ourselves expected the Russians to crack—we shared the Germans' belief in that respect. We didn't want the Russians to crack. We stood by Russia as well as we could. But the bit we could do, in 1941, wasn't enough in itself to save the situation. The Russians earned our respect by helping themselves—by doing the impossible.

We learned to respect British fortitude in 1940 at the time of the Blitz. Yet at that period of the war, Britain did not represent great strength as a fighting power, and there was the gravest doubt that the British would be able to handle the job before them, either on land, at sea, or in the air.

We didn't want the British to fold. We did everything we could to stand by them—short, of course, of joining the alliance and declaring war on Germany. By the autumn of 1941 we had even begun a sort of unofficial warfare, and the Germans and ourselves were swapping "incidents" at a rate that might well have led to war.

As for respecting Britain as a power, we began to have a better realization of the facts when we saw the performance of Montgomery and his Eighth Army.

TODAY WE think highly of both Britain and Russia as fighting companions.

As to what they think of us, we are not so sure. Certainly for a long time they thought of us as irritatingly weak and sublimely blind, as we went forward assuming that whatever the Germans and Japanese did to other people, they wouldn't dare tackle us. Certainly our early experiences in the war were not calculated to inspire confidence in our value as military partners.

But little by little, we too are earning our place—earning the respect both of allies and enemies. Once our Navy found itself, its performance began to be superb. Our airmen have proven themselves in all theaters. Our amphibious operations have been as successful as they have been bold. Our armies are rapidly gaining the combat seasoning that makes them the equal of any troops in the world. Our performance in production wins great praise.

America-Britain-Russia . . . the three tested and successful powers form a team of amazing versatility.

Now that we are all strong and successful, the time is here for a new kind of planned collaboration. All of us understand that—and all of us have joined in getting this collaboration started. If we carry it on as well as we should, and can, the world will be immeasurably benefited.

WITH SUCCESS, we three powers had all acquired camp-followers. Perhaps the good American word "stooge" is useful in describing these friends, not in terms of disparagement, but in terms of human nature.

Many of them are friends who fell away, a few years ago, when our stock was not so high. It was fashionable, among the smaller states, to respect the new fascism, then so glittery and successful, and to disparage democracy, seemingly so decadent and indecisive. Then it was the Germans who collected the stooges.

It is inevitable that the small and weak should pattern themselves after the great and powerful, and should attach themselves to the orbits of the larger states.

What is unfortunate is to see these stooges fail to realize the need for teamwork.

The most glaring current example is the situation in Yugoslavia. There, quite naturally, organizations have sprung up which affiliate themselves with the Russians . . . while other groups seek to affiliate themselves with the "western" combination, Britain and America. Nothing can prevent this—it is simply human nature.

It is also human nature for each of these organizations to hope to be the one which drives the Germans out of Yugoslavia either by its own efforts or through those of its chosen power. And after the Germans have been driven out, to fall heir to the political mastery of Yugoslavia. Mihailovitch hopes to do the job in the name of King Peter and with the support of Britain and America. Tito hopes to do the job in the name of a Communist regime (presumably headed by Tito) with the support of Russia.

Rivalry between these two factions is entirely apart from the spirit of the United Nations. In a small way, it represents the disintegration of the United Nations alliance.

Next to setting up effective teamwork between ourselves, it is the job and responsibility of the Big Three powers to set up teamwork between our stooges. If we can't put that through, our alliance isn't worth much.

New Taxes

Read with interest your comments on Judge Vinson coming off second in his colloquy on taxes with Representative Knutson before the Ways and Means Committee.

You state "the only test of any wartime tax program is would it serve in the battle on inflation?" and that "the facts furnished by Mr. Knutson prove that the Treasury tax program is inadequate." Please permit me to endeavor to answer you.

First—The only test of wartime taxation is not only inflation stoppage but to raise funds to pay for the war from those most able to pay. A sales tax will bring demands from every single wage or salaried person for raise to meet the 5 per cent or 10 per cent sales tax and it will be eventually granted. Hence an inflation of 5 per cent or 10 per cent in all costs.

I admit the Treasury tax proposal is inadequate. The increase in income tax rates should be much greater than they propose, but they know the opposition they face as evidenced in your editorial, hence they are trying to gradually advance rates. I admire their patience; they have a tough job.

The proposed new taxes will take $342 per annum more from the five-sixths group of income taxpayers. This amount will make them stop plenty of their frenzied buying. This is the $5000 or less group. If this were raised to $500 additional and it would still be below the English rates, it will aid in the battle against inflation.

The national income has increased 75 billion per annum in blood money in the past three years, but the Federal taxes have only increased 25 billion; this means saving the bills for our boys to pay in their future years. Isn't it sufficient that our boys are giving their blood? Can't we oldsters pay our paltry money NOW? "We cannot take it with us." G. BURGESS.

The Page Boys

Instead of debating how many hundreds of thousands should be spent for a new page boys' residence, the economy minded Congress should send these 12-and 13-year-old youngsters back home to live normal lives.

The appointment of congressional page boys is merely old-fashioned hometown patronage. Certainly enough young and willing boys can be found here in the District to serve the needs of Congress and live, at the same time, normal lives.

If nothing else, it will give the District some type of "representation" in Congress.

Warden Service

Much has been said, both pro and con, regarding the warden service. It has been praised and ridiculed no end, but the fact remains that it stands today as the communities' greatest safeguard against unnecessary loss of life and property and the best hope for immediate aid and assistance in the event of an attack from the skies.

Its continued value to the community can only be assured if it is left to pursue its own way unhampered, together with a friendly and cooperative spirit on the part of the general public.

The idea that the test alerts should be abolished is stupid. Can you imagine for a moment what the result would be if the City Commissioners were to issue an order, effective on such and such a day, that the police and fire departments would abolish all their various types of drills and practice sessions? Today, and every day until the final battle in this war is won, your air raid warden service is just as important to you as the fire and police departments.

Behind not-too-frequent alerts lie many hours of training for the wardens. They have not been placed at their posts lacking knowledge of what to do or how to do it. Hours of first-aid work, hours in classes on bombs and gases, and hours of other training are put in by the wardens while the general public is called upon to cooperate for the most part only about an hour two or three times a month. When you consider what the warden goes through in an effort to protect you, is it really asking too much of you to cooperate in the test alerts? SNIKSAH.

Passion's Letters

What is the price of free government? Here is the definition of a great statesman, Edmund Burke:

"Men are qualified for civil liberty in exact proportion to their disposition to put chains upon their own appetites; in proportion as their love of justice is above their rapacity; in proportion as their soundness and sobriety of understanding is above their vanity and presumption; in proportion as they are more disposed to listen to the counsels of the wise and good, in preference to the flattery of knaves. Society cannot exist unless a controlling power upon the will and appetite is placed somewhere; and the less of it there is within, the more there must be of it without. It is ordained in the eternal constitution of things that men of intemperate habits cannot be free. Their passions forge their fetters."

Posting The Books

By J. M. Lalley

Bard At A Bargain

THE TRAGEDIES OF SHAKESPEARE; THE COMEDIES OF SHAKESPEARE; THE HISTORIES AND POEMS OF SHAKESPEARE. (The Modern Library, 3 vols., 95 cents each.)

It certainly took the editors of the Modern Library a long time—something over a quarter of a century—to get around to the greatest of English poets. This can scarcely have been because Shakespeare was considered too remote in time to be "modern." In the days when this series was under the aegis of Messrs. Boni and Liveright, the emphasis was really on modernity, though even they made the word elastic enough to cover Villon (born 1432), Voltaire (born 1694) and the Abbe Prevost (born 1679). But since the enterprise was taken over by Mr. Bennett Cerf and his associates of Random House the original idea has been attenuated to include Homer, Plato, Aristotle, Virgil, Plutarch, Tacitus and Boethius, and very logically so. For whereas many, like W. L. George, who were modern enough in 1919, are now hopelessly antique, the greatest literature is always contemporary. And by recognizing this Mr. Cerf has made the Modern Library into one of the most lucrative of all chapbook experiments and an increasingly formidable rival to the Everyman series and the Oxford Classics.

The Modern Library's long neglect of Shakespeare, then, is probably to be explained by the numerous technical difficulties that had to be surmounted. An edition that might have assembled the plays by twos or threes into a dozen or more separate volumes could not have offered many advantages, in either price or presentation, over any of the numerous editions of the sort now available. Yet an attempt to assemble the whole Shakespearean canon between a single set of covers could not have produced a result very different than those clumsy tomes that are still to be found on drug store counters between the hair tonics and the ham sandwiches.

The solution has been a three-volume set. Each of these volumes runs to something over a thousand pages in the usual 4½x7 Modern Library format—small enough to fit, though perhaps not too comfortably, into an ordinary overcoat pocket. The text is set in 10-point type of a face with which I am not familiar, but which appears to blend some of the elegance and grace of Garamond with the compactness and legibility of Scotch Roman. The text is arranged not in columns but full across the page in a measure wide enough to accommodate the longest Alexandrine without breaking the line and yet allow a margin of one full inch. The paper is thin but opaque, and for wartime of surprising quality.

Obviously, though, the Modern Library Shakespeare has been prepared with the general reader rather than the student in mind. The jackets assure us that the text is unabridged but there is nothing (aside from a laborious comparison) that would indicate which of the various Shakespearean editors has been followed. There are no critical introductions, commentaries or interpretations; evidently the play's the thing, and almost the only thing. However, about a hundred pages of variorum notes and a glossary are appended to each volume. I would stake the price of a good many beers that the annotator is no other than our learned friend, Sir Israel Gollancz, but if he is credited anywhere in any of these three volumes I have failed to discover it.

I dare say that Messrs. Cerf, Klopper and Haas of Random House (whose names do appear conspicuously in each volume) consider this edition their greatest single triumph of publishing, as well they might. The Modern Library Shakespeare has not, you understand, quite the value of the Furness Variorum Shakespeare, or the Kittredge Shakespeare, or even of the Temple or the Arden Shakespeare, but I know of nothing anywhere nearly as good at anything remotely near a price of $2.85. Random House has already moved Shakespeare to the head of the whole list, so that these volumes appear as items 1, 2 and 3, respectively, in the Modern Library catalogues, as though it were anticipated that they will outsell everything else, as I am pretty certain they will.

The greatest literature is, as I said, always modern, in the sense that it is concerned with problems inherent in the nature of man and the moral universe he must inhabit, and is therefore independent of historic change. Yet there are moments when this sense of immediacy in the work of the greatest writers is heightened and emphasized by the recurrence of the historical and psychological climate in which the works were conceived. Thus it is that such a work as The Trojan Women of Euripides (written more than 2300 years ago in the midst of a catastrophic war) seems far more up to date than the latest topical novel or war correspondent's quickie hurried from the press six months or a year behind the events with which it purports to deal. So, too, I think Shakespeare has even more to say to us than he could possibly have said to the sedate and classical eighteenth century or to the complacent and optimistic nineteenth century. Macbeth, to take an example, dealing as it does with the problem of evil triumphant in the state, might, it seems to me, almost as easily have been written out of Signor Ferrero's The Principles of Power as out of Holinshed. For Shakespeare was like ourselves, in that he was caught as we are "between the times," in an age of great wars and turmoils, of panic and of social flux and confusion.

Coal Decision

By Ernest Lindley

Supporting Stabilization Policy

THE REASONING of the War Labor Board's decision on the Illinois coal agreement is involved. A majority of the board, quite evidently, wanted to do the best they could for the miners without violating the stabilization program. The result is a substantial victory for the mine workers. The average soft coal miner, according to the board's computations, will make about $80 a week for 46½ hours' work at the face of the mines plus 4½ hours travel time.

LINDLEY

John L. Lewis evidently recognized that the decision was really advantageous to the miners; otherwise he would not have been compelled to base his attack on it on a distortion. As the President wrote, there is no basis for the assertion that the board's proposals involve in any way a reduction in the basic rates that the miners are receiving. To make that doubly clear to anyone whose arithmetic may not be equal to analyzing the board's decision, the President suggested that the board announced that the contract include a clause to the affect "that in no case shall a miner receive for a day's work less than he would have received for his productive work at the straight hourly rate under the old contract."

WHY didn't Lewis promptly hail the decision as a substantial victory justifying his earlier tactics? That, one would think, would have been the instant reaction of a man concerned chiefly with the welfare of the mine workers, even if he had no concern for the security of his country and the lives and military success of its forces overseas.

If the mine workers defy the board's decision, if they insist upon striking, the President will have no alternative to "decisive action" to see that coal is mined. Nobody in official position in Washington expects any such action to be instantly and completely effective. Last spring, when the coal strike approached a showdown and the President appealed to the miners to return to work, it was realized that not all of them could be relied upon to heed his plea immediately. They had followed Lewis in union matters too long. But certainly in time the men would have gone back to work, and Lewis' leadership would have been shattered beyond repair. Lewis shrank from the test, and ordered the men back to work temporarily just a few minutes before the President spoke.

A few weeks later, the same maneuver occurred again, varying only in detail. In the showdown, Lewis again backed away.

In each encounter, his retirement was facilitated by Secretary Ickes. Ickes thought the miners had a case and he was interested in preventing a long stoppage in production. The War Labor Board was fighting to save the stabilization program and to defend the dignity of the Government. There was merit in both viewpoints, but certainly the stabilization program and the power of the Government deserved first consideration.

IF THE MINERS DEFY the War Labor Board, the country will suffer some, but the greater losers, almost certainly, will be Lewis, the mine workers, and organized labor generally. The A. F. of L. members fanned the fire of defiance with a sentence in their dissent in the Illinois decision: "This decision of the majority adds another to the list of this board which have been determined not on the basis of merit, but rather by the attitude of the individuals and Government agencies who dominate the actions of the public members of the board." Wayne L. Morse, one of the public members, in a plain-spoken response, has demanded that the A. F. of L. members prove their charge or retract it.

Mr. Morse interpreted the charge as an attack on the intellectual integrity of the public members. It seems to be, rather, another open assault on the stabilization program. The board is required to make its decisions with reference to restrictions set forth by statute, by various executive orders, and by the policy directives of the Director of Economic Stabilization.

THE A. F. OF L. MEMBERS seem to be saying, in effect, that the board should pay no attention to these restrictions. Obviously no one should sit on the War Labor Board who does not try conscientiously to perform the duties assigned to it. If the purpose of the A. F. of L. representatives is to destroy or breach the stabilization policy the only honorable course for them to take is to resign. If that is their attitude and they do not resign, they should be removed forthwith. The CIO representatives and all other members should, of course, meet the same test.

The entire inflation-control policy, in the success of which labor has a stake as great as any group's, faces another series of challenges. The question is whether enough union leaders recognize where the true interests of labor lie.

Steinbeck Tells of Elf's Gift of Scotch

By John Steinbeck

Who has just returned to the United States from an assignment as a war correspondent in Great Britain and the Mediteerranean area.

This story could not be written if there were not witnesses—not vague unknown men, but Quentin Reynolds and H. R. Knickerbocker and Clark Lee and Jack Belden, who was hurt at Salerno, and John Lardner and a number of others who will come clamoring forward if any one doubts the facts here to be presented.

The thing began when a British consul met Quentin Reynolds in the hall of the Alletti Hotel in Algiers. The consul was a small, innocent, well mannered man who liked to think of the British and Americans as allies and who was willing to make amicable gestures. In good faith he asked Reynolds where he was staying and in equal good faith Reynolds replied that he had not yet been billeted.

"There's an extra bed in my room," the consul said. "You're welcome to it if you like."

It Was Nobody's Fault

That was the beginning and what happened was nobody's fault. It was just one of those accidents. The consul had a nice room with a balcony that overlooked the harbor and from which you could watch air raids. It wasn't Reynolds' fault. He accepted hospitality for himself, not for the nine other war correspondents who moved in with him. Nine is only a working number. Sometimes there were as many as eighteen. They slept on the floor, on the balcony, in the bathroom and some even slept in the hall outside the door of room 140, Alletti Hotel, Algeria.

It was generally agreed that the consul should have his own bed, that is if he kept it. But let him get up to go to the bathroom and he returned to find Knickerbocker or Lee or Belden, or all three, in it. Another thing bothered the consul a little. Correspondents don't sleep much at night. They talked and argued and sang so that the poor consul didn't get much rest. There was too much going on in his room. He had to work in the daytime, and he got very little sleep at night. Toward the end of the week he took to creeping back in the middle of the afternoon for a nap. He couldn't get his bed then. Some one always had it. But at 3 in the afternoon it was usually quiet enough so that he could curl up on the floor and get a little rest.

Sticks to His Story

The foregoing is not the unbelievable part—quite the contrary. It is what follows that will require witnesses. It was during one of the all-night discussions of things in general that some one, perhaps Clark Lee, perhaps Dour Jack Belden, suggested that we were getting very tired of Algerian wine and wouldn't it be nice if we had some Scotch. From that point on this is our story and we intend to stick to it.

Some one must have rubbed something, a ring or a lamp or perhaps the utterly exhausted British consul. At any rate, there was a puff of blue smoke and standing in the room was a small man with pointed ears and a very jolly stomach. He wore a suit of green leather and his cap and the toes of his shoes ended in sharp points and they were green, too.

"Saints of Galway," said Reynolds. "Do you see what I see?"

"Yes," said Clark Lee.

"Well, do you believe it?"

"No," said Lee, who is after all a realist and was at Corregidor.

Jack Belden has lived in China for many years and he knows about such things. "Who are you?" he asked sternly.

"I'm little Charley Lytle," the elf said.

"Well, what do you want, popping in on us?" Belden cried.

The British consul groaned and turned over and pulled the covers over his head. Knickerbocker has since admitted that his first impulse was to kill the elf and stuff him to go beside the sailfish in his den. In fact, he was creeping up when Charley Lytle held up his hand.

Awaits Elves in Exile

"When war broke out I tried to enlist," he said. "But I was rejected on political grounds. It isn't that I have any politics," he explained. "uBt the Army's position is that if I did have, heaven knows what they would be. There hasn't been a Republican lepreChaun since Coolidge. So I was rejected pending the formation of an Elves in Exile Battalion. I decided then that I would just make people happy, soldiers and war correspondents and things like that."

Reynolds' eyes narrowed dangerously. He is very loyal. "Are you insinuating that we aren't happy?" he gritted—"That my friends aren't happy?"

"I'm not happy," said the British consul, but no one paid any attention to him.

Little Charley Lytle said, "I heard some mention made of Scotch whisky. Now it just happens that I have"—

"How much?" said Clark Lee, who is a realist.

"Why, all you want."

"I mean how much money?" Lee demanded.

"You don't understand," said Little Charley. "There is no money involved. It is my contribution to the war—I believe you call it EFFORT."

"I'm going to kill him," cried Knickerbocker. "Nobody can sneer at my war and get away with it."

A Case? Surely

Reynolds said, "Could we get a case?"

"Surely," said Little Charley.

"Three cases?"

"Certainly."

Jack Belden broke in: "Now don't you strain him. You don't know what his breaking point is."

"When can you deliver?" Reynolds asked.

Instead of answering, Little Charley Lytle made a dramatic and slightly ribald gesture. There was one puff of smoke and he had disappeared. There followed three small explosions, like a series of tiny depth charges, and there on the floor of Room 140 of the Alletti Hotel in Algiers were three cases of Haig & Haig pinch bottle.

That night there was an air raid, and even the British consul enjoyed it.

Any one who doesn't believe this story can ask any of the people involved.

Vice President Of Philippines Given Key Post

Vice President Sergio Osmena of the Philippines has been appointed chairman of a commonwealth postwar planning board created by President Manuel L. Quezon, the Philippine Department of Information and Public Relations announced yesterday.

Unless action is taken by President Roosevelt or Congress, President Quezon would have to relinquish his post to Osmena November 15, according to the Philippine constitution.

The announcement of the newly created position for Osmena did not disclose whether or how it would influence any decision in the matter, but from Quezon's executive order, which was signed September 15, it was evident that considerable authority has been vested in the vice president.

The planning board, according to the announcement, "will study and recommend plans for relief of the population immediately after occupation of the Philippines; the rapid rehabilitation and reconstruction of Philippine economy; postwar trade and other relationships of the Philippine Republic and other countries, and security of the Philippines after Japanese defeat."

Observers pointed out that President Quezon's order charged the board with virtually all the duties of the government-in-exile.

Members of the board, headed by Osmena, include Joaquin M. Elizade, resident commissioner of the Philippines to the United States; Andres Soriano, secretary of finance; Maj. Gen. Basilio J. Valdes, secretary of national defense, and Jaime Hernandez, auditor general.

Ration Book 4 Registrations To Resume Today

Washingtonians, who failed to apply for their ration book 4 in time, may register at their local ration board beginning today.

Estimating the number of delinquents as more than 125,000, Robert K. Thompson, District OPA director, yesterday urged quick registration to "relieve" boards of this additional burden as rapidly as possible.

One member of the family may get the books for all, it was pointed out, upon presentation of ration book 3. Thompson emphasized that applications should not be mailed to the District office which has no facilities for handling them.

Col. E. W. Starling Will Retire Today

Col. Edmund W. Starling, 68, supervising agent of Secret Service who has guarded five Presidents, will retire today after a 29-year career in the White House.

Some of the memories which the robust, 6-foot- Kentuckian will take with him to retirement are two trips to Europe with President Woodrow Wilson in 1918 and 1919 and standing behind the statesman as the peace treaty was signed at Versailles; fishing trips with President Calvin Coolidge, who made a companion of the faithful guard; an offer from President Herbert Hoover to serve as chief of police of the District, which Colonel Starling declined.

In a national broadcast last night Colonel Starling said President Roosevelt has a wonderful understanding, great courage; is at home with any man, and manages to find time for many pleasantries which delight the White House personnel.

Colonel Starling plans to spend his retirement years with Mrs. Starling at Miami Beach, Fla., where he has bought a house overlooking Biscayne Bay.

List of Nazi Mark Purchasers Leads FBI to Arrest 923

A telltale list of purchasers of German "re-migration marks" has resulted in the apprehension of 923 enemy aliens by the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Director J. Edgar Hoover said yesterday that some of the most dangerous German aliens in the United States first came to the attention of the FBI because their names appeared on the list of purchasers of "rueckwanderer marks." Of those apprehended, 726 have been interned or paroled and 72 released, while 125 cases are pending.

The sale of rueckwanderer marks, which could be spent only in Germany, began in the United States in May, 1936, and continued until June, 1941, when a presidential proclamation froze such foreign remittances.

Controlled by Reich

Hoover said the entire program was controlled by the German Ministry of Economics in an effort to obtain foreign exchange. Purchasers of the "re-migration marks," according to Hoover, included many naturalized citizens as well as German aliens in this country. Two of the eight German saboteurs who came to this country by submarine in June, 1942, had purchased the exchange when previously in this country, while several convicted German spies also had invested American dollars. (Six of the eight saboteurs were executed, the other two receiving long prison sentences.)

Purchasers of rueckwanderer marks were credited at a designated German bank at a preferential rate of 4.1 Reichmarks per dollar, as compared with the then prevailing exchange rate of 2.48 Reichmarks per dollars.

'Typical" Cases Cited

Hoover said the following cases were typical of those brought to the attention of the FBI through purchases of rueckwanderer marks:

A German who had worked as a waiter in cities from San Francisco to New York bought $610 worth, believed that "might makes right," and was unwilling to fight for the United States against the Axis. He is now interned.

In New York, an alien couple bought $5000 worth of the German bank credit. The FBI found them both to be violently pro-Nazi, although they had lived here for 20 years. The husband said he was willing to aid German espionage agents if asked to do so. They, too, are interned.

A naturalized citizen in the Midwest, an outspoken admirer of Hitler, bought $5000 worth. Denaturalization proceedings have been filed. If denaturalized, he may be interned.

U. S. Help Hinted In Rebuilding Soviet Industries

By the Associated Press

Discussion of plans for American aid in rebuilding the Russian industrial machine is suggested as the reason for Donald M. Nelson's visit to Russia. The War Production Board (WPB) chairman is expected back in Washington any day.

Associates of Nelson say it would be "logical to suppose" that Nelson discussed with Moscow officials the provision of machine tools and industrial machinery to rebuild an economy in the ravaged lands recovered from the Nazis.

The rapid and sustained Red army advance makes it evident, these sources say, that the work of reconstruction can be begun before Germany falls. It is indicated that American machine tool capacity, vastly expanded for war purposes and now facing a sharp decline in orders, might be brought into play to aid the restoration.

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

Cleveland, Oct. 31.—Down in the subterranean locker rooms of big Municipal Stadium, Capt. John Whelchel, the Navy coach, was still in something approximating a daze as his athletes filed in after taking that 33 6 licking from Notre Dame.

POVICH

"We didn't figure to win, but I never thought they'd roll up that kind of a score against us," said Whelchel. "What a football team that Frank Leahy has come up with! Army has my sympathies for next week. They'll beat Army with or without Bertelli. I didn't think any team could do what they did to us."

With or without Bertelli, he said Notre Dame would beat Army, and that was interesting. Because Bertelli was the guy who had just licked Whelchel's team in what might have been called a great one-man show. But Whelchel was thinking, too, of that great Notre Dame line, and of all those break-away backs and that pass defense of the Irish which was something to see. Notre Dame could win without Bertelli. They needed only a pale facsimile and they have that in Johnny Lujack, who also throws passes.

Bertelli truly threw himself a farewell party in his final game for the Irish before going into boot training with the Marines at Paris Island. With his quarterbacking he made Notre Dame's T-formation attack a fulsome thing, a menace on every play and when he came out of his crouch behind the center with the ball in his hands, Navy could never be sure what would happen, what disposal he would make of it.

On the dry field at Cleveland, the Irish gave a grand display of the potency of the T attack. Three times Bertelli threw touchdown passes off it. When he wasn't throwing the ball he was faking it to backs who were seemingly running in all directions at once, and Navy was never quite sure who had the ball. Creighton Miller and Jim Mello and Julie Rykovich were exploding off the Navy tackles or drifting around the ends.

Bertelli's prize play, though, was his touchdown pass to big John Yonaker, the 6-foot-4-inch end, in the third quarter when the Irish had only a skimpy 13-6 lead. On that one, Notre Dame was on the 2-yard line on fourth down. The Irish weren't doing so well against the Navy line. Bertelli decided to pass. He was downright brazen about it. It was the first time all day that he discarded the T-formation. He stood back in the tailback position for a direct pass from center and stationed his halfbacks wide, with his ends also spread a bit. Anybody could tell it was going to be a pass, but Bertelli didn't care. Despite the tip-off, he found Yonaker in the end zone and hit him with a touchdown flip.

Army scouts who were in Cleveland appraising Notre Dame for next weekend's clash at New York must have brought back discouraging reports on the Irish pass defense. How to beat it is something for West Point to ponder. Hamberg threw 38 passes and only eight connected. The Irish were doing things to Navy's passing attack.

That's where Leahy's smart, aggressive line came in. With White and Czarobski and Adams standing like a stonewall at the tackles, and Perko a tremendous bulwark at right guard, Leahy was able to have more men covering Hamberg's passes than Hamberg had eligible receivers. The entire Irish backfield, the roving center and one guard were covering Hamberg's receivers on virtually every play while the line and ends were rushing the daylights out of the Navy passer.

It was a gallant sort of battle that little Hamberg put up all afternoon despite his poor percentage of completed passes. Early in the game it was evident that Navy's running attack was going nowhere against that Notre Dame line. Navy had to go down the line with Hamberg's passing game. Navy couldn't run the ball for more than a 4-yard gain until late in the final quarter. If Hamberg wasn't arm weary by that time, he certainly must have been lame and sore. The Notre Damers were treating him very ungently all afternoon, but he was in there pitching to the finish.

We'd say the Irish are sure shots to beat Army next week, even without Bertelli. Lujack is a tolerable passer and so is Frank Dancewicsz. If the Irish passing game bogs down, they're still potent with such as Creighton Miller, Jim Mello and Rykovich to run the ball. Leahy revealed a better than fair ball carrier, too, in Vic Kulbitski who reeled off that 71-yard gallop in the final quarter.

This one is probably the geratest Notre Dame team since 1930, perhaps the best since Rockne's Four Horsemen of 1924. That 1930 team was the club, you remember, that didn't lose a game. It was Rockne's last team, the one that licked Southern Cal, 27-0, after the Trojans had won the Pacific Coast title. It also beat the Big Ten champion, Northwestern. And against a Pitt team that was unscored on until it met Notre Dame, the Irish rolled up a 35-0 score with Rockne playing his regulars only 19 minutes. Penn they licked, 60 to 20, with Marty Brill having a field day.

That 1930 team had Frank Carideo, Marchie Schwartz, Brill and Joe Savoldi in the backfield, and Tommy Yarr, Bert Metzger, Tom Kassis, Joe Kurth and Al Culver in the line. Carideo was the forward passer but he couldn't pass with Bertelli. The moment his contract with Uncle Sam expires, some pro club is going to pay handsomely for it.

College Grid Giants Losing Navy Trainee Stars This Week

New York, Oct. 31 (AP).—This is the weekend that the program salesman becomes the most important personages in the stadiums as the football teams, revamped by Uncle Sam's war needs, provide a schedule that calls for Army vs. Notre Dame, Penn vs. Navy and numerous crucial conference clashes.

Gridiron masterpieces at Notre Dame, Michigan, Purdue, Duke and Georgia Tech will be playing for the first time without the trainee stars that made them click earlier in the season, an experience that Southern California, Dartmouth and Southwestern of Texas, among others, had last Saturday.

Angelo Bertelli said farewell to Notre Dame for the duration by passing for three touchdowns and bucking across a fourth as the Irish humiliated Navy, 33 to 6, with 82,000 fans watching at Cleveland. In Philadelphia, Bob Odell, inducted into the Navy Reserve only two days earlier, snagged a pass for a 71-yard gain and a fourth period touchdown that brought Pennsylvania a 13-to-13 deadlock with Army.

None Previously Beaten, Tied

Prior to the start of the two games, none of the participants had been tied or defeated this season.

Purdue and Michigan continued their unbeaten Big Ten status by downing Wisconsin and Illinois, respectively. The Boilermakers crushed the Badgers, 32 to 0, as Tony Butkovich smashed the Big Ten scoring record before being transferred by the Navy, and Michigan knocked off the Illini, 42 to 6.

Northwestern, an early season victim of Michigan, stayed in the title chase with a 42-to-6 verdict over once potent Minnesota, the next foe for Purdue.

Southern California clinched the Southern Pacific Coast circuit flag and won a Rose Bowl bid by downing California for the second time this season, 13 to 0. Washington demonstrated again that its lonesome Huskies are a Northwest power by spilling the Spokane Air Force outfit, 41 to 7.

Duke, Wake Forest and North Carolina loom largest in the Southern Conference although the Wake Forest Deacons have lost one family start to Maryland and Duke polished off North Carolina, 14 to 7, in an earlier meeting.

Devils Whipped Ga. Tech

The Blue Devils on Saturday trimmed Georgia Tech, 14 to 7, with both clubs shy some of their Navy-trainee heroes and North Carolina bested North Carolina State, 27 to 13. Wake Forest romped over Clemson's freshmen, 41 to 12, in another family spat. North and South Carolina have their annual feud Saturday.

Texas and Texas A. and M. continued moving toward their Thanksgiving Day clash at the top of the Southwest Conference ladder with positive verdicts. The Longhorns blanked Southern Methodist, 20 to 0, and the Aggies triumphed over Arkansas, 13 to 0. This week SMU entertains the Cadets for a comparison of scores.

Missouri Leads Big Six

Missouri and Oklahoma apparently are the one-two teams in the Big Six again and are booked for a meeting at Columbia on November 13. The Tigers, with 240-pound Don (Bull) Reece in the fullback slot, crushed Nebraska, 54 to 20, while the Sooners eliminated a tough loop foe, Iowa State, 21 to 7.

Tulsa, tied by Southwestern of Texas in Saturday's outing in a 6 to 6 struggle, is the leader in the abbreviated Missouri Valley loop and Colorado has a similar status in the Rocky Mountain's Big Seven.

Louisiana State, shepherded by big Steve Van Buren, has the best conference record among the four surviving Southeastern loop teams but collides with Georgia Tech Saturday and still must meet Tulane on November 20. The Bayou Tigers banged out a pair of touchdowns Saturday to trip Texas Christian, 14 to 0. Tulane was stopped by the Georgia Preflighters, 14 to 13.

Washington Lions Play Camp Holabird Tonight

The Washington Lions Negro semi-pro football team will meet Camp Holabird, led by Red Briscoe, former Lions star, at Griffith Stadium. The Lions, coached by Harry Graves, former Armstrong mentor, will start last year's stars, Harvey Banks, Buck Walker, Beyman Frazier and Oswald Glymph.

Grady Boys Win

The Grady Boys football team defeated the Trinidad Cats, 41-7 at Turkey Thicket Field yesterday.

Packer's Late Rally Beats Giants; Bears Topple Lions

Texan Sets Record as Dodgers Bow

By Merrell W. Whittlesey

Brooklyn, Oct. 31.—The muscle magic in the pitching arm of Slingin' Sammy Baugh carried the terrific Texan to a new National Football League record today—six touchdown passes in one game—and by the grace of those aerials the Redskins slaughtered the Brooklyn Dodgers, 48-10, before 11,471 fans in Ebbets Field.

The old league record of five touchdown passes in one game, held jointly by former Bear Ray Buivid and former Packer Cecil Isbell, was erased midway in the final period when Baugh whipped a perfect strike to Andy Farkas from 25 yards out.

The most important of Baugh's payoff pitches, however, was the second which came four minutes before the end of the first half and pulled the Redskins out of a horrible slump into a 14-10 lead. Baugh connected with the game only two minutes old, but for the remainder of the first quarter and most of the second the Dodgers took charge.

Baugh Reforms Mates

Brooklyn, still without a victory in six starts, pushed over a touchdown and added a field goal as the Redskins played the part of bush-leaguers. Baugh suddenly reformed his mates, pitched a pair of quick six-point passes in the second, added a pair in the third and his record-breaker in the fourth before leaving the game at the end of 53 minutes of play.

Twice Sammy selected Joe Aguirre and Wilbur Moore as his receivers, and Bob Seymour and Farkas once each. For the day Sam clicked for 376 yards, hitting on 16 of 28 passes, with three intercepted. Only one Redskin touchdown, a Farkas line-buck from six inches out late in the game, was not Baugh propelled.

Baugh's touchdown-pass record for the day:

1. After two minutes of play, Aguirre faded to the left and was clear of Dodgers as he took a short pass and went 44 yards for a score.

2. With 12 minutes and 50 seconds of playing time elapsed in the second period and the 'Skins trailing, 10-7, Baugh shot a flank pass to Moore, who defied the slippery footing and sped down the sidelines in a play covering 52 yards.

3. Less than two minutes later the Redskins recovered the ball on a lucky break; Seymour rushed 25 yards into the end zone, turned and tucked a Baugh pass in his arms.

4. Following a Baugh-Aguirre pass which covered 39 yards to the 9-yard line, Baugh whipped a bullet, jump pass to Aguirre, who was dead ahead in the end zone.

5. Baugh and Moore combined on the most spectacular play of the day, Moore dashing down the sidelines and scoring on a 71-yard over-all play, the pass covering half the distance and Moore the rest.

6. With the game wrapped up and Baugh still playing, obviously in a record-breaking attempt, Sammy hit Farkas in the midsection with his final pass for 25 yards.

Getting Excellent Protection

Baugh was getting his usual excellent protection on passing and he was spotting his receivers with perfection. None of the catches were the falling, reaching, sprawling type. All were well-timed maneuvers with the receivers on the spot and Sammy tossing strikes to the mark. Baugh added his new record to three all-time marks smashed last week.

After each of the touchdown passes, Redskin Capt. Bob Masterson hobbled from the bench for the extra point try, booting five of six and losing one when the Redskins were penalized. Joe Pasqua added the point after Farkas' final touchdown.

The Dodgers gambled with desperate football in the early going and their fancy spread plays twice backfired into ultimate Redskin scores. On their very first play the Dodgers went into an elaborate spread, sending three backs and an end in a box formation far to the right. Pug Manders passed short—and Redskin Guard Steve Slivinski intercepted. Farkas made five yards in two plays and Baugh then clicked for his first to Aguirre. Farkas missed most of the game with his injured leg, limping off the field after five minutes of play and returning in time to score twice in the fourth period.

The Dodgers, leading 10-7 late in the second period, interrupted a steady first down march with a spread play which lost 10 yards as Clyde Shugart solved the formation. Forced to kick, Brooklyn lost the ball and in bang-bang fashion Baugh pushed over two scores.

Brooklyn Bounces Back

Brooklyn bounced back nicely from the early Redskin score to tie the count and then go ahead by a field goal. Ken Heineman, who starred as the Dodgers broke their scoreless streak against the Bears last week, flipped a short pass to Manders for a touchdown. Manders was trapped, danced away and cut sharp for midfield where he beat a path 53 yards for a score. Bruiser Kinard converted and to the surprise of all the Dodgers had a tie game.

Baugh and Ray Hare attempted to cross the Dodgers with a reverse a moment later but the ball was fumbled in the process and Wehba

Bears Muzzle Lions, 35-14, On Pass Plays

Chicago, Oct. 31 (AP).—Sid Luckman shot touchdown passes of 38, 51 and 25 yards and bruising Gary Famiglietti bulled his way to two more scores today as the Chicago Bears won their fifth straight National Football League game by crushing the Detroit Lions 35-14 before a crowd of 25,187.

Luckman, hitting nine out of 20 passes for a gain of 241 yards, boosted his touchdown tossing total to 14 for the season, moving into a tie with Washington's Sammy Baugh.

Fumbles on One-Yard Line

In the first quarter, Famiglietti fumbled on the Detroit one-yard line and Augif Lio recovered for the Lions. Harry Hopp punted to his own 36, Dante Magnani returning the ball to the 17. In four plays Famiglietti charged over from the three and Bob Snyder added the first of his five successful points on placements.

In the second quarter, Luckman uncorked a pass to Harry Clark for 38 yards and a score.

Detroit made the count 14-7 in the third period. Ned Mathews sponsored the march with a 42-yard sprint. In three more plays, Elmer Hackney drilled over from the four and Lio booted the point.

After the kickoff, Luckman spotted an 18-yard spiral to Dante Magnani, who grabbed the ball on the 33 and dashed over.

Sets Up Lion Touchdown

A Bear fumble set up another Lion touchdown. Frankie Sinkwich, who completed eighth of 15 passes for 111 yards, pitched 39 yards to Ben Hightower on the one. The Georgia Peach then squirmed over. Lio again kicked the point.

The Bears clinched matters with a pair of markers in the finale. After swiping a Sinkwich pass they drove to the Detroit 31 and Famiglietti sprang through tackle to score.

Luckman ended the deluge by passing 25 yards to Jim Benton, who made a running dive for the ball in the end zone.

Boston Beats Brooklyn, 37-6

Boston, Oct. 31 (INS).—With Eddie Doherty doing the pitching and Dave Aznouvarian the running, Boston College swamped Brooklyn College, 37 to 6, before a crowd of 8000 at Fenway Park today.

Right Halfback Aznouvarian was the scoring ace for BC, thrilling the crowd with several long runs to chalk up three touchdowns for the Eagles.

Capt. Eddie Doherty, quarterbacking, threw several spectacular forwards passes setting up most of the scores and tallied once himself. Cahill and Morro scored the other BC touchdowns after they had been set up by Doherty's long passes.

The only Brooklyn touchdown came in the third period after two long runs by Yarvin and Cooper. Then Cooper plunged over from the 1-foot line.

The End of the Road for Johnson

Associated Press WIREPHOTO

Cecil Johnson, Brooklyn Dodger halfback, is halted for no gain by Wilbur Moore, Redskin back, when he attempted to circle end in the first quarter of yesterday's game at Ebbett's Field, won by the Redskins, 48-10. Johnson was injured on the play and had to leave the game. Ted Lapka (45), Redskin end, is coming up to help Moore but Wilbur didn't need it, so emphatically did he tackle the Dodger ball carrying star.

Steagles Stack Aces To Beat Cards, 34-13

Pittsburgh, Oct. 31 (AP).—The Philadelphia-Pittsburgh Steagles clicked off three explosive touchdowns in the first 10 minutes of play today and went on to hand the hapless Chicago Cardinals their sixth straight defeat, 34 to 13, in a National Football League game before 16,351 fans. It was the third victory of the year for the Pennsylvanians after humiliating losses to the Bears and Giants.

The two teams put on a wild offensive show the first two periods, scoring a total of five touchdowns, all of the spectacular variety. The Pennsylvanians counted first on an 86-yard runback of an intercepted pass and quickly followed this advantage with another touchdown on a 31-yard pass and a third on a kickoff fumble recovery.

Cardinals Score Twice

The Cardinals, however, uncorked a dazzling aerial game in the next period that produced two touchdowns and almost another before the Phil-Pitt combine again could take command.

Ben Kish, former University of Pittsburgh star, accounted for the game's first score, after the Cardinals had recovered a fumble and were threatening from the Phil-Pitt 18. On the second play Kish speared an attempted pass by Walt Masters and dashed 86 yards down the sidelines unmolested.

The Steagles then surprised the Cards with an onside kickoff and moments later Roy Zimmerman whipped a pass from the Chicago 31 which Tony Bova gathered in as he tumbled into the end zone.

The third Steagle score of the period was an unusual one, with Don Cahill, former Holy Cross star, letting a kickoff slip through his hands and then touching the ball down in the end zone, believing it would be a touchback. Jack Hinkle of the Eagles pounced on the ball and officials ruled it a touchdown.

Thurbon Sparks Drives

Bobby Thurbon, another former Pitt star, sparked 63- and 66-yard-marches for other Phil-Pitt touchdowns in the fourth period. He plunged over from the 3 for one score after 25- and 13-yard sprints, while Zimmerman passed 26 yards to Bova for the other. Zimmerman placekicked four extra points.

The Cardinals hit pay dirt in the second period on a 34-yard pass from Masters to Don Currivan and a 67-yard pass play from Cahill to John Hall, with Hall actually sprinting 55 yards.

Fr. Flanagan Arrives Here Tomorrow

Father E. J. Flanagan, founder and sponsor of Boys Town, Nebr., will arrive here tomorrow to support the charity football game between Boys Town and Gonzaga High School at Griffith Stadium at 2 p. m. Sunday.

Father Flanagan will make his first appearance locally at 12:30 tomorrow when he is key speaker of the Touchdown Club's weekly luncheon. At 3 o'clock he will visit Walter Reed Hospital, where he will meet Gen. John J. Pershing, and will visit with some of the United States' war wounded. Father Flanagan never overlooks an opportunity of conferring with men of our armed services, and jumped at the chance of interviewing some of the boys at Walter Reed.

On Thursday night he will be guest of honor at a meeting and party of the Nebraska State Society at the Statler Hotel. On Friday night Father Flanagan and the entire Boys Town squad will visit Police Boys Club No. 2, where Father Flanagan will address more than 2000 Negro boys.

Seats for the Gonzaga-Boys Town game will be on sale at Griffith Stadium this morning.

Boys Town Defeated By Chelsea, 26 to 7

Chelsea, Mass., Oct. 31.—Led by the pile-driving Nick Opolka, Chelsea trounced Boys Town from Omaha, Nebr., 26-7, before 9000 enthusiastic fans at Chelsea Memorial Stadium yesterday.

Boys Town looked like a world beater in the opening minutes of the game. Chelsea kicked off and Omaha marched right up to midfield on perfectly executed plays from the "T" but the Red Devils took over and from then on Opolka and his teammates had the game under control.

Trojans Already Named West Coast Rose Bowl Eleven

Los Angeles, Oct. 31 (AP).—Unbeaten, untied and unscored-on in six straight games this year, the Trojans of Southern California are football champions of the Pacific Coast Conference, Southern Division.

The Trojans also are one of the two teams that will play in the Bowl of Roses in Pasadena New Year's Day. They clinched that honor Saturday when they turned back an embattled squad from the University of California for the second time this season.

This is the first time in history the Pacific Coast championship has been decided as early as October.

Packers Slam Giants, 35-21; Hutson Stars

New York, Oct. 31 (AP).—Striking 53 yards through the air in two plays and 35 yards on the ground in one operation, the Green Bay Packers scored two touchdowns in the last 5 minutes to hand the New York Giants a 35-to-21 defeat in a National Football League game played before 46,208 fans at the Polo Grounds today.

The Packers, with Don Hutson breaking five of his own league records and Tony Canadeo sharing offensive honors with his veteran pass catching end, struck for their final two touchdowns after the Giants had come back from a 21-7 deficit at the half to knot the count at 21-21 early in the fourth quarter.

Here's the Record

Taking Hutson's records in order: (1) caught seven passes to boost the new mark to 358; (2) was on the receiving end of two touchdown aerials to boost his record to 77; (3) scored 17 points for a league standard of 578; (4) picked up 118 yards for a new mark of 5926 yards and (5) made two touchdowns for a league record of 77.

With Canadeo doing most of the hurling, the Packers completed 15 out of 21 aerials for a total of 241 yards. It was veteran Andy Uram, however, who pitched the longest one of the day. He fired the ball 48 yards to set up the Packers' fourth touchdown. After Hutson had picked up 2 yards on an end-around play, Canadeo tossed the last 15 yards to Hutson. The final scoring drive started from the 35-yard line when the Giants got away a short put. On the first play Canadeo broke off tackle and went all the way.

Tied in First Quarter

The Giants tied the count in the opening quarter on a 56-yard drive. A 17-yard pass from Tuffy Leemans to Bill Paschal was the pay off.

The Packers threatened to turn the game into a rout in the second chapter when they roared down the field for two scores. They went 73 yards for the first with Uram pitching to Canadeo for the final 12 yards. The second touchdown came after a 76-yard march in which the final play was a 17-yard aerial to Don in the end zone.

Starting the last half the Giants struck 59 yards to get back into the ball game with Paschal blasting over.

After being checked on their 1-foot line at the start of the final session, the Giants took the Packers' punt out on the 45-yard line and aided by a penalty, they went all the way with Paschal plunging over again. Cuff added all the extra points for the Giants and Hutson did the same for the Packers.

Bob Masterson Holds Up Game, Missing Kick

A Staff Correspondent

Brooklyn, N. Y., Oct. 31.—Redskin Captain Bob Masterson held up the game for some five minutes today while missing a point after touchdown, his only failure in six attempts. The setting was the second half when Masterson came in after ball. It was fifth touchdown pass. Bob's first attempt was good but the official said he didn't report and the Redskins were penalized five yards. . . . Masterson's second was good but this time the officials detected holding and the Redskins were penalized 15 additional yards, back to the 30-yard line. . . .

Masterson didn't get a chance to kick, due to a fumbled pass from center. Bob picked up the ball and started to run but saw he was trapped. So he backpedaled to pass. All Bob was interested in was getting rid of the ball. By this time he flipped a wobbly pass over the charging Dodgers which Bob Seymour made a nosedive after but missed and the Dodgers finally put an end to the antics by falling on the ball.

Ensign Bob Titchnel, with the Redskins last year and now at the Lakehurst Naval Training Station, visited ex-mate Bob Mc-Chesney. . . . The former Redskin end watched the game from the press box as the scout for Chicago Cardinals. His assistant was Dapper Dan Jack Espey. . . . Alumnus of Catholic University listened to the game from the American International. . . .

Dodger Pete Cawthon was a sideshow today while the Dodgers were ahead. He was a wild man dashing onto the field, hugging players, crawling on the ground, but in the second half he was quiet. . . Dudley DeGroot, Coach Dutch Bergman's adviser from the telephone high in the stands, was credited with helping the Redskins in their troubled moments by telling Bergman the Dodger pass defenders were playing too close and there was plenty of room over their heads. Bergman flashed word to Baugh and presto, the Redskins had two touchdowns on long pass plays.

Frank Akin, who sprained his ankle in Saturday's practice, was the only Redskin who did not get in the game. . . . Angelo Paternoster, the Redskins' latest addition from Georgetown University, was one of Bergman's first substitutions. . . . George Smith left the game in the first half when a Dodger cleat found his bruised foot. . . .

Sammy Baugh booted a pair of timely quick kicks 53 and 55 yards. . . . Frank Seno made his best showing since the Cardinals exhibition. . . . He set up Farkas' touchdown with a neat 12-yard gallop to the Dodger 4-yard line. . . . The honor of catching Baugh's record-breaking sixth touchdown pass almost went to Alec Pasecky, who dropped a tough-to-catch heave in the end zone.

Horse Show Honors Again To Applejack

For the third time in as many weeks, Capt. and Mrs. Alvin Kay's giant-striding black gelding, Applejack, yesterday was awarded the jumper title of the North End Horse Show at Silver Spring, Md.

Ridden by Gardner Hallman, Applejack fenced in the style that six years ago made him one of the top jumpers of the East as he earned two blues and several lesser ribbons. Mrs. Hallman, who for two years exercised the big horse regularly without taking him over a fence, took over the saddle work in the open jumpers to capture one of his blues.

Close behind was Jackie Warren's brilliant 6-year-old, Yankee Doodle, which tied with Jeep, ridden by Bucky Magill, for the reserve title and won the award on a coin flip. Yankee, a consistent winner ever since his arrival here from Texas in June, was ridden by Mrs. Fred J. Hughes, jr., who is "durationing" in the District while her husband is overseas with the Calvary.

Among the hunters, U. S. Randle's Gee Ray Bee attracted the judges' eye in three successive outings to pile up sufficient points for the tricolor, thus nosing out Mr. and Mrs. George Mueller's imported Ballela, reserve winner.

Perk Daniels, Conway Meet Here Tonight

Perk Daniels, Chicago defense worker who had lost only one bout in 20 pro matches, will make his bow tonight at Turner's Arena, meeting Clent Conway, gangling Fort Monmouth, N. J., soldier, over the 10-round route.

Although he never has displayed his wares locally Daniels is favored at odds of 8-5. He defeated Conway last spring in Newark in a 10-rounder.

Daniels' record shows that his only defeat was at the hands of Lem Franklin in Perk's fourth pro fight.

Conway has appeared here nine times and has taken away eight victories.

The Golden Greek of Alexandria, Nick Latsios, will face Joe Sole, Baltimore veteran, in the 6-round semiwindup. Latsios is unbeaten in 13 pro fights. Sole is substituting for Tommy Molliso.

Two heavyweights, Dan Biggers and Walter Hafer, will meet in a six. Other sixes show Herschel Todd against Edsel Martz and Oliver Ham against Gene Brown.

Three Features Booked for Arena Card Wednesday

Three feature matches, all one-fall-to-a-finish, have been rounded up for Wednesday night's banner wrestling show at Turner's Arena. All matches must end with either a decision or disqualification.

Previously closed out are bouts in which Michele Leone, the Italian champion, will meet Dr. John Bonika, the Boston medico, and in which George Macricostas, the Golden Greek, will scrap with Cliff Olson, the former heir pretender to the mat crown.

Yesterday the third bout was booked, and it involves Babe Sharkey, the huge Texan, and Ed (Strangler) White, former pro footballer.

Baugh Tosses For 6 Scores As 'Skins Win

recovered on the Redskins 18. Three plays failed to produce a first down so Kinard dropped back to the 20 for a field goal with seven minutes of the first period gone.

The next 20 minutes were scoreless as the sluggish 'Skins couldn't gain for losing. Seymour made a first down and Ray Hare sprung through for 16 yards but otherwise the Dodgers were on the alert and most of the passes Baugh missed came in this period.

After the Redskins score which put them ahead at 14-10 they held the ball on the kickoff as Joe Aguirre's boot sliced off to the right and Ted Lapka recovered an onside kick. The Dodgers had previously pulled a legitimate kick to hold possession but the 'Skins attempt was on the accidental side.

Dodgers Held in Check

The game lost semblance of a contest in the second half as the Redskins rolled up touchdowns and remained unbeaten through four games, taking a big two game lead in the Eastern division. The Dodgers were absolutely threat-less in the second half.

Brooklyn, which showed a net 11 yards lost rushing for the first four games, rolled up 123 yards to 86 for the 'Skins with Condit, McAdams and Manders carrying the load. First downs were only nine to eight for the Redskins but since when have first downs counted in the scoring?

Lt. Col. Felix Takes Crown At Woodmont

Dick Mothershead and Lieut. Col. Max Felix joined the select circle of golf champions in Washington's Metropolitan area by winning the club titles at Argyle and Woodmont, respectively, after scoring upsets in their final rounds yesterday.

ARGYLE

Mothershead, medalist, won the Argyle championship from Jess Baggett, a veteran of local club competition, 3 and 2, ending the battle on the thirty-fourth hole of a scheduled 36-hole final.

Although Baggett was generally considered a slight favorite, Mothershead played steady golf from the outset, and at the end of the initial nine had banged out a 1-up lead.

They were even at the halfway mark, but again the champion forged into a slight lead to finish the twenty-seventh hole, 1 up.

Going into the thirty-fourth hole, Mothershead was leading Baggett, who eliminated Defending Champion Fritz Williams en route to the final, 3 up. On this hole both men shot par 4's to halve it and end the match, giving Mothershead a 3-2 victory and the championship.

Results of other flights were:

Second flight—Shirley Chamblin defeated Nolan Gibson, 4 and 3; third flight, W. L. McDaniel defeated L. J. Falch, 2 and 1; fourth flight, A. Wigley defeated J. Jennings, 1 up on the nineteenth hole.

In the opening round of the women's championship, Mrs. Billy Williams, defending titlist, retired Mrs. Moffett, 3 and 2. In other first-round matches, Mrs. Dick Mothershead defeated Mrs. Catherine DeJung, 5 and 4; Mrs. Emily Scoggins defeated Mrs. Edwin Widmayer, 4 and 3; Mrs. G. Sascer won from Mrs. Donald Hess by default.

WOODMONT

Lieut. Col. Max Felix scored a tremendous upset in winning the Woodmont crown from Howard Nordlinger, defending champion, 3 and 2, in the 18-hole final.

Felix, who has been playing the course for the past year, made good in his first club championship battle in defeating Nordlinger, who was stroking for his fourteenth title. He played steady golf throughout and finished the out mine with a 2-up lead.

The Army officer's steadiness proved the margin of the victory over Nordlinger, who at times during the match seemed to be pressing.

KENWOOD

Hugh Clines and Jim Martenson won Kenwood's two-man team championship carding a 138-12, 126. The tourney was 36 holes of medal play, using best-ball scores minus one-half the combined handicaps. Clines and Martenson went out in 70-6, 64, and posted a 68-6, 62, on the incoming round.

Four strokes behind the winners came the Allen Laing-R. W. Diggs combine and the team of R. L. Wilcox and S. E. Carpenter to tie for second place with net scores of 130. Laing and Carpenter fired a 146-16, 130, and Wilcox and Carpenter shot a 156-26, 130.

Other tournament finishers were: Lieut. (USN) Clarence Ellis and A. E. Oeth, 164—32, 132; L. W. Perce and H .T. Morse, 164—32, 132; Sidney Lanier and R. M. Kerr, 152—20, 132.

Pro George Diffenbaugh also staged a blind bogey yesterday with three used golf balls as the entrance fee. The results in this contest were Sam O'Neal, 89—14, 75; S. E. Carpenter, 83—8, 75; G. M. LaRiviere, 85—10, 75; C. A. Miller, 89—14, 75; George Pleam, 97—22, 75; George Meleny, 90—15, 75.

CHEVY CHASE

Reeve Lewis, jr. and Britton Brown teamed to defeat Capt. I. C. Bogart, USN, and Henry Ravenel, 4 and 3, in a semifinal match for Chevy Chase's liberty cup. Next Sunday, Lewis and Brown will face L. B. Platt and Don DeVeau in the final.

Platt and DeVeau survived the other semifinal last Sunday, retiring Fred Hitz and W. B. Mason, jr., 6 and 5.

INDIAN SPRING

Maj. and Mrs. John Ives won Pro Mel Shorey's husband-and-wife tourney at Indian Spring yesterday with a card of 192—25, 167. Major Ives contributed an 86, while Mrs. Ives posted a 106.

Mr. and Mrs. Carl Giles' 180 was sufficient to capture the tournament's low gross award. Mr. Giles turned in an 88, while his wife fired a 92.

NOTES

Washington Golf and Country Club, Belle Haven and Columbia offered no tournament golf yesterday, but all three clubs reported a large number of golfers out and their courses in excellent condition.

Penn Strategy

Running Ball On Final Play Big Gamble

By Ted Meier

New York, Oct. 31 (AP).—Gather round, you Monday quarterbacks and debate this question? Did Penn do the right thing in running with the ball on fourth down in midfield in the last minute of its game with Army at Philadelphia?

Picture the situation: Two unbeaten, untied teams are tied 13-13 with 71,615 spectators feeling thrills running up and down their spine. Penn has the ball in midfield, fourth down, 10 yards to go, and only 40 seconds left to play.

Would you gamble by passing or running or play safe by kicking?

Called Running Play

Quarterback Bob Odell, of the Red and Blue, elected to call a running play. Joe Kane gained 3 yards on the play, but it wasn't enough so the Army took over on its own 47 with 20 seconds left, plenty of time to get off a possible long forward pass for a winning touchdown.

As it turned out Army had time to try two aerials. One fell incomplete, the other was completed for a first down on the Penn 30 as the final gun sounded.

And what about Steve Filipowicz's backward run in the Tulane-Georgia Preflight game at New Orleans?

The Preflight boys were ahead by 14-13 and had the pigskin on the Tulane 30 with fourth down coming up. There were 11 second left to play. Filipowicz took the pass from center, executed an about face and ran all the way back to his own 34 as the game ended.

Just Suppose

Just supposing a Tulane man had been chased back over his own goal line for a safety, giving Tulane a 15-14 victory?

That is what Odell did in his sophomore year at Penn when the Red and Blue played Columbia at Franklin Field in 1941. Penn was ahead, 19-14, when Odell deliberately ran 50 yards in reverse for a safety. The play gave Penn an opportunity to get off an offside kick without the possibility of it being blocked. It worked out, too, Penn winning, 19-16.

Commodores Spill Jackets

Baltimore, Md., Oct. 31 (AP).—The Bainbridge Commodores remained the only undefeated football team in Maryland college and service ranks today following the crushing 33-6 defeat handed Navy Saturday by Notre Dame at Cleveland, but otherwise Free State footballers had a successful weekend.

The powerful Bainbridge Naval Training Station outfit, sparked by Oregon State's Don Durdan, who made three touchdowns on long runs, scored its fifth straight win yesterday before 10,000 bluejackets, walloping the semipro Philadelphia Yellowjackets, 72-0.

Also in the victory parade over the weekend were the University of Maryland and the Curtis Bay Coast Guard. Maryland trimmed the Greenville (S. C. Army Air Base, 334th Bomber Group, 43-18, Saturday, while Coast Guard came from behind to edge out the Camp Lee (Va.) Bulldogs, 7-6, in the fourth quarter.

Heurich Cage Loop To Meet Tonight

Plans also will be advanced for the formation of a girls' league. Any feminine teams interested are welcome to send representatives.

No. 11 Trips No. 4

By the margin of Johnny Tepps' two perfect placement points after touchdowns, No. 11 Police Boys' Club yesterday defeated No. 4 in an upset Police Boys' Club League victory. Jones and Tepps scored for the winners and Sanford and Funk registered for No. 4.

Tufts Whips Coast Guard Academy, 20-7

Medford, Mass. Oct. 31 (INS).—With their T-system baffling the big favored Coast Guard Academy Eleven, little Tufts scored a 20 to 7 victory over the Cadets at Tufts oval today to win the mythical New England small college championship.

Right Halfback Rutter scored two tallies and Left Halfback Fortin the other for Tufts. The Jumbos, outweighed 15 pounds a man, outcharged and outplayed the Cadets the entire game.

Rutter scored the first touchdown after a 40-yard drive in the second period. Fortin tallied the second score on a 52-yard rush in the third stanza.

The Cadets came to life in the final period when Cadet Dorsey threw two passes for 31 yards to the Jumbo 7. Fullback Lynch plunged the remaining distance for the only Coast Guard score.

Gaels Defeat Dons, 19 to 7

San Francisco, Oct. 31 (AP).—Paced by the passing and plunging of Hawaii's Herman Wedemeyer, St. Mary's Gaels defeated University of San Francisco 10 to 7 in their football game today.

Held to a 7-7 tie in the opening period, the Gaels broke the deadlock in the second quarter and clniched the game with a touchdown in the final minutes of the contest.

Wedemeyer, stocky halfback from Honolulu, scored the first touchdown with a 27-yard dash and set up and had a hand in the next two scores. He converted one of the extra tallies, missed the others, intercepted one pass to make a 35-yard runback and got off another run of 30 yards to earn his oats for the day.

Harold Van Giesen, St. Mary's right half who also comes from Honolulu, scored the second touchdown on a 31-yard run while John Ryan, sub fullback, busted 15 yards through guard for the final score.

Paper Asserts Masons Plot Against Franco

Madrid, Oct. 31 (AP).—The weekly magazine El Espanol said today it had discovered a "Spanish Masonic plot" to overthrow Generalissimo Francisco Franco and set Prince Juan III on the throne to bring Spain into the war on the side of the United Nations.

The magazine said the plot was led by Diego Martinez Barrio, former premier and president of the republican Spanish parliament, and it published photographs of documents purported to be from Martinez Barrio as Masonic grand master of Spain.

It said Don Juan, now living in Switzerland, was to be brought back after a military revolt overthrew "Franco's inquisitorial dictatorship." Juan was described in the documents, El Espanol said, as "manageable."

The report was published with official sanction. An accompanying editorial on the documents was designed to convince monarchists and middle class anti-Communists that the return of Don Juan and the end of the Falange were ardently desired by Communists, Masons and republican exiles.

An explanatory article said a "Spanish Mason whom God touched on the heart, horrified by the monstrous plot against Spain through the shadowy sect and anxious to do a service which would redeem him of his past faults, gave us the documents which we publish today."

The letter said "well directed convulsions will shake the tyrant Franco to such an extent as to move him from his center of gravity—the army."

It said former Premier Juan Negrin, former Defense Minister Indalecio Prieto and former minister without portfolio Felipe Sanchez had composed their difference, and that the aid of Alejandro Lerroux, former minister of foreign affairs, had been enlisted.

Prieto had been reported moving away from socialism and favoring a bourgeoise republic, it continued, but Salvador de Madariaga, former Ambassador to the United States, "convinced him of the convenience of keeping these aspirations as a possible goal" while choosing a democratic monarchy as a lesser evil.

45 Enemy Planes Destroyed In New Allied Raid on Rabaul

Liberators were intercepted by 40 Japanese fighters. In fierce aerial duels the Liberators destroyed nine enemy planes while their Lightning escorts bagged 16.

On the same night Australian-flown Beaufort medium bombers made several sorties over Tobera airdrome, at Rabaul, hitting dispersal and supply dump areas.

The raid announced today approached the intensity of the October 25 assault on Rabaul when bombers dropped 151 tons of bombs, destroyed 21 planes on the ground and shot down 37 in combate.

Liberators on night patrol Saturday in the Vitu Island group north of New Britain Island sighted a convoy of war vessels escorting several small merchant ships northward. After shadowing the convoy, our bombers made a run on some destroyers as they rode into Planet Harbor at Mundua Island.

Two direct hits were scored on one destroyer, which the communique claimed as probably sunk, and several near misses which inflicted some damage on another.

During the night of October 28-29 Allied light naval craft, presumably PT boats, sank a large enemy barge crammed with men off Blucher Point just north of Finschhafen, New Guinea. An escorting vessel, probably a heavily armed antiaircraft barge, also was sent to the bottom. Nine empty barges were sighted along the beaches.

Corsairs Strafe Harbor

The South Pacific Air Force on Thursday executed two attacks against Kara airdrome at Buin, Bougainville. Again the pilots reported no interception and observed only a few planes—possibly wrecked—on the airdrome.

Corsairs made a low level strafing sweep over Tonolei harbor at Buin, destroying four small troop-filled cargo ships. Divebombers and fighters bombed and strafed Ballale airfield on Bougainville without interception. Intense antiaircraft fire damaged several of our planes but all reached home base.

The Allies landed in midweek at two points on the southwest side of Choiseul and split the defending Japanese forces in two. Little opposition was encountered in the initial landings.

The latest bag of Japanese aircraft at Rabaul added to the record destruction of 775 planes during October in the Southwest Pacific, the important Rabaul airbase taking the brunt of the assault with 303 planes lost on the ground during the month, 36 probably destroyed and 78 damaged.

More Legislative Activity by Labor Urged by Murray

Philadelphia, Oct. 31 (AP).—Urging continued and increased legislative activity by organized labor, President Philip Murray of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, said tonight that "the current session of Congress has witnessed the most vicious and continuous attack on labor and labor's rights in the history of the Nation."

Murray, in a 74-page report to the sixth constitutional convention of the CIO which opens here tomorrow, warmly defended labor's wartime record, declared that the CIO has "religiously maintained" the no-strike pledge, and promised organized labor would give "our continued and undivided support to our Commander in Chief in fighting men, in production, in patriotism" for "the immediate military destruction of the Fascist Axis."

He reported, without mentioning the total of CIO membership, that "over one million new members have joined our various international unions during the past 12 months."

Soft-Coal Sale Curbs Feared

Anthracite Stock Low

(5). There is a scarcity of Pocahontas coal in the city, a fair supply of slack and a good supply of run of the mine, all of which fall in the soft coal category. The stock of anthracite in Washington is extremely low.

It is expected that the last coal on which restrictions will be placed is the run of mine variety.

In the face of this unsettled condition, dealers were expecting a greatly stepped-up demand for soft coal as householders faced the dreary aspect of being limited to a purchase of only half a ton of anthracite at a time.

For this reason, men close to the industry said they expected the large dealers to clamp down on some sort of restrictions of purchases today themselves.

Furthermore, dealers asserted, regardless of what action will be taken by the President, it is expected it will be a full week before production at the mines is in full swing again and still longer until fresh shipments arrive in the city.

observation point over enemy activities on redoubtable Massico Ridge.

British Yield Ground

But in the flat shelf of the San Salvo area near the Adriatic the Germans lashed out with a savage counterattack which compelled the British to yield ground. The British bridgehead over the Trigno there was reported still secure, however.

Headquarters disclosed that total casualties suffered by the Fifth Army since the Salerno landing had been divided almost equally between the Americans and British.

Flying Fortresses raided steel works, warehouses, and a sulphur refinery at the port of Savona yesterday. American Liberators blasted the Genoa freight yards and Ansaldo steel works in a heavy raid following up a Fortress assault the day before.

In the eastern Mediterranean, a Middle East communique reported a raid by Allied heavy bombers Friday night on Heraklelon airfield at Crete, attacks on enemy shippings off Rhodes, in Naxos arbor and at the Island of Cos. Four German planes attacking Allied shipping in the eastern Mediterranean were shot down yesterday.

The German communique said one Allied cruiser and two destroyers had been hit directly and one 500-ton transport vessel sunk in a raid on an Allied convoy in the eastern Mediterranean.

The Berlin communique said Allied forces supported by tanks attacked between the Mediterranean coast and the Volturno and "fighting is still in progress. A local break-in northeast of Capua was cut off."

Mustangs piloted by Canadians reached the Paris area, where they shot down two planes and raked a third German fighter on the ground with their guns.

The British radio said Mosquito bombers, the fastest warplane in the world, are being used as night fighters, and last night shot down two German raiders attacking London.

One bomb and incendiaries were dropped on London outskirts and areas beyond in the German raid tonight. A southeast town also was hit by high explosives.

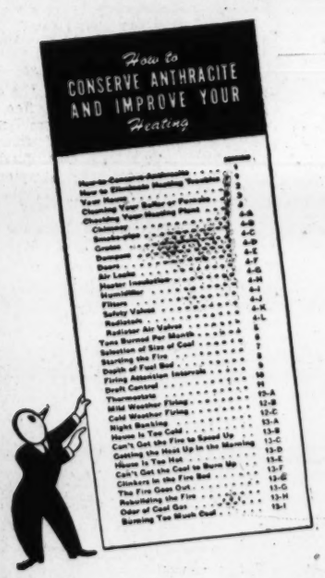
FALL FIRING !
HOW TO SAVE WITH
Anthracite, the Conservation Coal



YOUR basement is a firing front in both senses of the phrase. That makes the new folder here illustrated one of the really vital documents of the war.

"How to Conserve Anthracite and Improve Your Heating" is the title of the folder and it tells you exactly that. In complete, illustrated, minutely detailed style, it gives you readily understandable instructions on how to cut your coal consumption 10% while actually increasing your heating efficiency.

Ask your Anthracite dealer for your free copy. Or write Anthracite Industries, Inc., 101 Park Avenue, New York 17, N. Y.

Follow the folder's Fall Firing tips and you make the available supply of hard coal go further. You save on your own fuel, save dollars, avoid overheating, obtain just the amount of heat you want. And remember that cold weather firing is covered just as thoroughly. Get your copy NOW!

Here are just a few of the helpful suggestions incorporated in the folder. These apply especially to Fall Firing:

FUEL BED: Always carry a deep fuel bed—and, in mild weather, see that a large portion of it is ash. Accumulate this ash bed by less frequent shaking of the grates.

DRAFTS: Most of the time, the drafts can be almost entirely shut off. To do this (1) open the cheek damper on the smoke-pipe, (2) close the turn damper in the smoke-pipe, (3) close the ashpit damper and door, (4) open butterfly damper or slide in firing door. (Diagram shows location of draft controls.)

STARTING FIRE (with grates clean): Place a 3 or 4 inch layer of coal (or about half this thickness of ashes if available) on the grates. On top of this, place a generous amount of paper and kindling. When the kindling is well ignited, cover it with a thin layer of coal. As soon as the coal is burning, add a full charge.

REBUILDING FIRE: Do not dump ash from previous fire. With a poker or shovel, make a crater-shaped hole in the center, leaving a small part of the grate bare. Using charcoal or kindling wood, build a small fire in the hole with all drafts on the fire. When the kindling material is well ignited, place coal on the fire. After the coal is burning freely, add sufficient to cover the full area of the fire-box.

It's always a big crowd in these war days. But the Long Distance operator keeps the calls moving quickly unless they just get too many for the circuits. • If she says the circuits are busy, you can help by canceling your call if it isn't really important. Comptroller General Rules on Overtime

The Comptroller General has handed down two decisions which may mean money in your pocket. The first is of wide interest to employes who are called on to work more than 48 hours in any week. It was thought that the President had cleared up this matter when he ordered that compensatory time off must be given to the employe within 90 days or he must be paid for the excess time worked. Now the Comptroller General has ruled that Uncle Sam isn't obligated to pay for this additional time if (1) the employe resigns voluntarily, (2) transfers at his own request to another job, or (3) refuses to take time off when ordered to by his agency. In brief, if under any conditions where it's the employe's own fault for not taking the compensatory time off he won't be paid for it.

KLUTTZ

However, the comptroller said the employe must be paid for the excess time if (1) he's inducted into the armed forces before he's given a chance to take off compensatory time, (2) involuntary separation, or (3) if he's transferred without his consent to another job under the war manpower directives. In another important decision, the comptroller said the time a transferred employe spends in a war job he's transferred to—even though the war job may hvae been at a higher salary—will be counted toward his Ramspeck in-grade automatic promotion when he returns to his old job. This decision will affect tens of thousands. For example, if you were paid $2000 and had been transferred, with reemployment rights, to a war job at a higher salary and had returned to your job after a year the year you were away would be counted toward the 18 months you must wait before you can get an in-grade promotion.

Terry O'Donnell of Arlington Farms is the editor of the newspaper at Girl Town. The newspaper needs a snappy name . . . James G. Robinson, who resigned from WPB a year ago to become collector of revenue for Iran, is back . . . Two top career men at the Bureau of Internal Revenue are thinking seriously of resigning . . . The Ramspeck Committee has invited the bigwigs of Army-Navy Electronics Agency to answer mismanagement charges leveled at the agency. Their testimony will be made in a closed session . . . Civil Service wants to hire manpower utilization consultants. Salary, $4600 to $5600.

It happened the other day at the War Production Board. The girls were tipped off that a famous person would visit their building. Capt. Clark Gable was in the city and the girls were all a-twitter with the thought of seeing the handsome Army flyer. At the appointed time, Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt walked in . . . William J. Bissell, manager of the Government girl dormitories, was the auditor for similar establishments during World War I . . . Interior Secretary Ickes may make Walter Gellhorn, of Columbia University, his undersecretary.

And speaking of parttime work. the Post Office here is up against it trying to hire people to handle the Christmas mail. Meantime, hundreds of Federal workers would like to work several hours daily but they are forbidden to do so by the dual compensation law. In these days of manpower shortage it's about time that law is suspended for the duration. . . . Office of Strategic Services has found an effective way to make employes hold onto their identification badges. Employes who leave them home are made to wear much larger badges which reads: "I lost my badge." One Federal agency outside Washington levies a $5 fine for each badge lost.

The War Deparmtent is about ready to launch a recruiting campaign to get clerical people for the Pentagon and other offices here. It's reported on good authority that it plans to hire up to 3000 stenographers—a terrific number. Moreover, the department will send out its own corps of recruiters to work with the Civil Service Commission to round up the workers. One of the several reasons why it's difficult to get people to take jobs here is the fact that the results must pay their transportation. However, the departemnt is said to have worked out a device to get around that. After all, it's only fair that the Government should foot the cost. The Government, through War Manpower, demands that private industry pay transportation.

TIP TO EMPLOYES IN THE OFFICE OF INTERAMERICAN AFFAIRS: You have an employe in your agency who has set himself up as a self-appointed Gestapo. This person has a dossier on many of his colleagues, unknown to them. If you happen to be on his blacklist he'll note it down in his notebook if you come in late, take a job on the side, or idle away a few minutes reading a magazine. Of course, the Gestapo chief is very efficient and all the time he wastes making marks in his black book and on the telephone is nothing at all. He must think that God has appointed him to look after others.

FBI to Audit Bricklayer Union Local's Books

FBI auditors have taken possession of the books of Washington Local No. 1 of the Bricklayers Union in an attempt to determine whether union funds have been embezzled, it was revealed last night.

Assistant District Attorney Charles Murray admitted the account books were taken up following a grand jury investigation in September. The local is a unit of the International Union of Bricklayers, Masons and Plasterers (AFL).

Murray revealed the books were obtained for audit "at the suggestion of the grand jury." He expects a report from FBI within the next three weeks.

A spokesman for the local, which has headquarters at 829 3d st. nw., said the books had been turned over to District Attorney Edward M. Curran but disclaimed any knowledge of a reason. The spokesman said that union members knew the books were impounded.

Thousands of Washington Catholics yesterday participated in services commemorating the world-wide Feast of Christ the King.

Local highlights were a solemn benediction service and parade last night sponsored by the Holy Name Society of St. Peter's Church, 2d and C sts, se., and the confirming of a class of 304 children of St. Gabriel's parish, Grant Circle, by the Most Rev. Michael J. Curley, Archbishop of Baltimore and Washington, in the afternoon.

While crowds lined Southeast streets, the procession of Holy Name men and boys; volunteer contingents of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps and Coast Guard passed in review before the Most Rev. Michael J. Keyes, titular Bishop of Aeropolis, and other religious, military and naval dignitaries on the steps of St. Peter's rectory.

Is Grand Marshal

James C. Sansbury was parade grand marshal, and deacons of honor to Bishop Keyes were the Rev. Walter J. Hayes, pastor of St. Peter's, and the Rev. Nelson C. Schrader, chaplain at Providence Hospital. Military aides were Lieut. Col. Walter J. Stewart, USMC, and Lieut. Comdr. Hart Kait, USN. The Knights of Columbus, Fourth Degree, Washington Assembly, were guard of honor, and the cadets of St. John's College acted as military escort. The Metropolitan Police Club Boys' Band played.

During the church ceremony, Bishop Keyes received the new members of the Holy NName Societies; blessed the new Holy Name banner and flag of Christ the King. The prelate then presented the latter emblem to Anthony Cardinale, representing the boys of St. Peter's Parochial School. The Very Rev. Ignatius Smith, O. P., Ph. D., dean of the School of Philosophy, Catholic University, delivered the sermon.

Faithfulness Urged

At another service Archbishop Curly, addressing 1000 worshipers at the St. Gabriel's confirmation service, urged the confirmants to acknowledge that Christ is their king and leader, to be faithful to Christ, and to lead exemplary lives.

The Archbishop, in a letter to the priests and people of the Baltimore and Washington Archdioceses, and appearing in the current issue of the Baltimore Catholic Review, urged observance of the Feast of Christ the King.

Explaining that while war circumstances prevented the usual elaborate public demonstrations of the Feast Day, the Archbishop expressed the hope that the occasion would be observed with "particular solemnity" in all parishes.

Kelly Marks His 2d Year As Police Head

Police Superintendent Edward J. Kelly will celebrate today the second anniversary of his appointment to his present administrative position. Among the congratulatory messages received yesterday was a letter from Representative F. Edward Hebert of Louisiana, a member of the House Committee on District Affairs, who described the police force here as "one of the best in the Nation."

The Congressman's letter:

My dear Major Kelly:

Please accept my congratulations on the splendid work of your police force in solving the murder of Mrs. Charlotte Robinson so quickly.

This is the kind of police work which demands the respect of a community and is another indication of the rejuvenation of the Metropolitan Police under your direction.

It is a source of personal satisfaction to me because of the realization that I played no little part in the complete reorganization of the Metropolitan Police which culminated in your elevation to the position you now occupy.

Ever since you took charge Washingtonians, instead of apologizing for their police force have been in a position to boast that it is one of the best law-enforcement agencies in the Nation. Sincerely yours,

F. EDW. HEBERT.

The Congressman makes his home in Alexandria, Va.

Pickpocket Gets $900 From Visitor

A trip to the movies Saturday night cost a visitor to Washington his admission plus $900. And the sum wasn't invested in War Saving bonds, but in a lesson on how to be a victim of a pickpocket.

Stanley H. Friend of Jacksonville, Fla., who was staying at 2022 F st. nw., went to the Capitol Theater where "Doctor Gillespie's Criminal Case" was the feature. It was while he was standing in the lobby of the theater that Friend thinks he was robbed of his $900, he told police.

Friend said he suspected a "bearded gentleman" standing near him, who may have been light-fingered enough to fish eight $100 bills and five $20 bills from a side coat pocket.

Although he asked the Metropolitan Police to try to locate the suspect, Friend admitted that he may have lost the cash, and that he was going right back to Jacksonville, where, he indicated, a side coat pocket is considered a safe place for any amount of money.

Troops Seen Unscathed Spiritually

Rabbi Solomon B. Freehof of Pittsburgh, president of the Central Conference of American Rabbis, yesterday predicted that our men and women in uniform would return from the war "spiritually unscathed."

Speaking at the opening of Sunday morning services at the Washington Hebrew Reformed Temple, attended by many Jewish men and women in uniform, Rabbi Freehof said that young men in the Army "are subjected to certain spiritual situations which can build up a decent and genuine faith."

"They have the sense of homelessness," he said. "They may grope their way to God, the eternal Father. They have the sense of comradeship, they can learn the moral of self-sacrifice earlier than most of us. They have the sense of how quickly life may pass and know how precious are the moments of our earthly opportunity.

"Understanding that and fighting in a decent cause without lust of battle and with only love for peace, they will come back spiritually unscathed. After the wars our young Americans will return, with God's grace, secure to their homes and help rid the sanctuary of man of its polluting hates and prejudices."

The Reformed Congregation, of which Rabbi Norman Gerstenfeld is spiritual leader, started the Sunday morning services to accommodate the numbers of Jewish men and women unable to attend the Jewish Sabbath services Friday nights and Saturday mornings. The Friday and Saturday services will continue as usual. The services yesterday marked the first time in the Temple's 91-year history that Jewish services have been held there on Sunday.

USO Work Praised

The work of the National Catholic Community Service, a USO agency, in providing for the needs of Catholic men and women in uniform, was praised yesterday by the Rev. Lawrence F. Schott. He is diocesann military deputy of the Diocese of Harrisburg.

Speaking over NBC on the National Catholic Hour, with the cooperation of the National Council of Catholic Men, on the subject, "The Church and Servicemen," Father Schott said in part:

"In our work, religion is understood to be an intelligent design for living and not a matter of an hour's endurance on a Sunday morning. The young men and women whom we serve are doing a great deal of serious thinking and they must come to some reasonable solutions or they become bitter and frustrated. God and souls and religion must fit into the pattern of life or we are existing in a madhouse.

"The war and fighting and death must have some deep spiritual significance or everything is hopeless. In the charity in action of this work a new stress is placed upon the second of God's two inclusive commandments—the love of neighbor—and a new understanding is achieved of the reason for this human love in our love of God. Building upon these firm foundations, tolerance and cooperation receive a new interpretation and meaning. That the servicemen and women understand and appreciate these clubs is evinced by their own words."

City News In Brief

A program of 12 concerts for children of Washington schools, arranged by the National Symphony, was announced yesterday by J. E. Mutch, manager of the orchestra. Eleven concerts will be played in nine District high schools. The gala concert ending the season will be in Constitution Hall, with Hans Kindler conducting. It will be played on Saturday, March 25, beginning at 11 a. m.

Schedule for the school concerts follows: November 8, Eastern High School; November 18, Western; December 16, Central; January 10, McKinley; January 24, Armstrong; February 10, Roosevelt; February 14, Anacostia; February 21, Armstrong; February 28, Woodrow Wilson; March 6, Calvin Coolidge, March 13, Armstrong.

Crooks Provides Enjoyable Program of Familiar Songs

By Ray C. B. Brown

Dorothy Hodgkin Dorsey presents Richard Crooks, tenor (Frederick Schauwecker, accompanist), and William Primrose, viola (Harry Kaufman, accompanist), in Constitution Hall on Sunday afternoon. Program of songs by Bach, Rosa, Handel, Schwartzendorf, Paladilhe, Fourdrain, Donizetti, Freire, Ponce Carnevali, Warren, Mendelssohn and Elgar; instrumental pieces by Bach, Benjamin, Aguirre, Valle, Schubert and Paganini.

Richard Crooks faced a crowded Constitution Hall yesterday afternoon at his recital in which he was assisted by William Primrose, viola player extraordinary. The popular tenor was in excellent voice and sang with his customary clarity in enunciation. There was much to enjoy in the suavity of his phrasing, the sonority of his full tones, the admirable command of pianissimo and the justness of his readings. These merits were devoted to songs that seemed to have been selected for their familiarity, with the one exception of Elinor Remick Warren's "Sailing Homeward," his sole recognition of a native composer.

His first group contained Bach's "If Thou Be Near." Rosa's "Star vicino" and Handel's "Sound an Alarm." He began his second group with "Plaisir d'amour" by J. P. A. Schwartzendorf, alias Jean Paul Martini, and followed it with Paladilke's "J'ai dit aux etoiles" an Fourdrain's "Chevauchee Cosaque." Since "Plaisir d'amour" is such a lovely lyric, one wonders why some singer does not search out another from Martini's 12 operas and other vocal works.

In his third group were Freire's "Ay, Ay, Ay" (programed as an anonymous "Creole Song"), Ponce's "Estrellita" and Carnevali's "Canto de amor," while the final group contained Mrs. Warren's song, Mendelssohn's "On Wings of Song," and a solo version of "Land of Hope and Glory" from the trio of Elgar's "Pomp and Circumstance" March No. 1 in D major.

William Primose, who is one of the greatest masters of the viola, made his share of the recital a sheer delight. Such beauty of tone I have heard from only two other viola players: Lionel Tertis, who retired in 1936, and Nathan Firestone, first viola of the San Francisco Orchestra, who died suddenly last month. Mr. Primrose also began with a Bach aria, but promptly followed it with a novelty: Arthur Benjamin's neat little concerto on themes by Cimarosa. His other group consisted of an Argentine dance by Aguirre, a prelude by Valle, a transcription of Schubert's "Litanei" and his own arangement for viola of Paganini's twenty-fourth caprice in A minor.

Phillips Memorial Gallery presents Lilly Hertz, soprano (Konrad Wolf, accompanist, and Gilmour McDonald, piano, in a joint recital on Sunday afternoon. Program of songs by Debussy, Hahn, Hugo Wolf, Richard Strauss, Schumann and Brahms, and piano pieces by Chopin, Respighi, Liszt, Godovski, Vernon Spencer and Falla.

The art of lieder singing was exemplified yesterday afternoon in Phillips Memorial Gallery by Lilly Hertz, widow of Dr. Alfred Hertz, who conducted at the Metropolitan Opera for 13 years and was conductor of the San Francisco Orchestra from 1915 until his retirement in 1929. In a period so addicted as our own to the exploitation of personality, it is seldom that one hears a singer wholly dedicated, as is Mrs. Hertz, to the revelation of song itself. Her readings are selfless in the sense that the emotional projection is that of the poem and the setting, and other readings she imparts a true spiritual quality. In phrasing, stress and verbal implication, she discloses an instinctive lyricism coupled with artistic sensitiveness.

A miscellaneous group offered Debussy's "Romance," Hahn's "D'une Prison," Hugo Wolf's "Verborgenheit" and "In der Fruehe," Richard Strauss' "Traum durch die Daemmerung" and Schumann's "Widmung." Her second group contained six lieder by Brahms: "Maedchenlied," "Minnelied," "Der Jaeger," "Immer leiser wird mein Schlummer," "Wie bist du meine Koenigin" and "Der Schmied." Her sympathetic accompanist was Konrad Wolff.

Gilmour McDonald, formerly of California and now resident in Washington, opened his share of the recital with compositions by Chopin: a mazurka, a nocturne, a waltz and two etudes. A later group contained a nocturne by Respighi, Liszt's F minor etude, Godovski's "Perpetual Motion," Vernon Spencer's "Widow Bird" and Falla's "Ritual Fire Dance." He has a pleasant touch, facility in technique, and a poetic way of applying them.

National Gallery of Art presents Alfio Micci and Earl Wild in a recital of sonatas for violin and piano on Sunday night in the east garden court. Program: Sonata in D major (Vivaldi-Respighi), Sonata in G minor (Debussy), Sonata No. 2 (Quincy Porter), Sonata in D minor (Brahms).

Two estimable young musicians from the United States Navy Orchestra, Alfio Micci and Earl Wild, gave a very enjoyable recital of violin and piano sonatas last evening in the National Gallery of Art. Since their induction in the service, both these youths have been stationed in Washington to the benefit of our musical experience. Both are artists who, in their formative stage, give promise of great accomplishment.

Their program contained one timely work, the second sonata of Quincy Porter, who had on the previous evening received the Elizabeth Sprgaue Coolidge Medal for eminent services to chamber music. Whether it was coincidence or deliberation that brought the performance so close to the award does not matter. The sonata, written in 1929, is an engaging work in the composer's highly original idiom. The opening and closing movements are fiery and impetuous, and the central andante is a lovely bit of meditative lyricism.

Respighi's version of Vivaldi's D major sonata opened the program, which contained the Debussy sonata and the D minor sonata of Brahms. The playing was technically alert, spirited in interpretation and well balanced between the instruments.

Spirit of Reformation Leads Norwegian Church, Hauge Says

Norwegian Christians are resisting the Nazis "in the spirit of the Reformation," Osborne Hauge of the Nerwegian Embassy staff said yesterday as Washington Lutherans joined brethren throughout the world in observing the 426th anniversary of the Protestan Reformation movement.

"That (R formation) movement, which helped to instill in the minds of men of all nations a passionate love of independence and freedom, is being renewed and reexpressed in Norway today, where the church and its clergy are standing like a rock against the tide of naziism," said Hauge.

"The church has steadfastly refused to relinquish its responsibility to serve the people of the country according to the doctrines and traditions of the Lutheran Church of Norway. It has succeeded in resisting every effort to violate the church and in doing so has helped to light a flame of determination that burns brightly in the hearts of all Norwegians.

"By its example, the Church of Norway has demonstrated to the world that it is carrying on in the true spirit of the Reformation, that the Christian faith is the permanent bulwark of freedom, the impregnable wall of resistance to tyranny and injustice."

Reformation Lutheran Church on Capitol Hill marked the anniversary at its three worship services and also at a Reformation musical program in the afternoon. Luther Place Memorial Church at Thomas Circle welcomed Dr. Paul J. Hoh, of the Lutheran Theological Seminary, Philadelphia, as guest preacher, and sponsored Reformation musical vespers later in the day.

Dr. Frederick E. Reissig, Federation of Churches' executive secretary, a clergyman of the Lutheran faith, spoke at Grace Lutheran Church.

World Order Mission Seen Aiding Peace

By Robert Tate Allan

The Christian Mission on World Order, which opens nationally today and comes here November 9, "outranks Hull's mision to Moscow in its significeance for the world's future," Dr. Paul F. Douglass said last night.

Dr. Douglass, president of the American University, yesterday addressed worship services concluding the School of Christian Living at Rhode Island Avenue Methodist Church, 1st and Rhode Island ave. nw.

"We are now living in enemy-occupied territory, spiritually speaking," Dr. Douglass told a large congregation, "with man engaged in a civil war against God." He urged his hearers to continue to think seriously about the plans for a just and durable peace to prevent future wars.

"Spiritual Lend Lease"

God is concerned with "spiritual lend-lease," he said, "since His resources are adequate for all nations." Referring to the advent season's approach, the university head said that when Jesus came into the world almost 20 centuries ago, he made a "spiritual invasion into rebel territory."

The Christian Mission on World Order, most ambitious Protestant cooperative endeavor since the famed National Christian Mission of 1940-41, is being held in 100 major cities through November 20. Its aim is to help mold public opinion for a just and lasting peace.

Cosponsoring the mission here will be the Washington Federation of Churches and the Washington Council of Church Women. National sponsors are the Federal Council of Churches, representing Protestant churches with a membership of 25 million; the Foreign Missions Conference of North America; the Home Missions Council of North America; the International Council of Religious Education, cooperating agency of boards of Christian Education of 42 denominations and 175,000 Sunday schools; the Missionary Education Movement and the United Council of Church Women.

Speakers and discussion leaders at the day sessions November 9 at Calvary Baptist Church will be Dr. Henry Hitt Crane, pastor of Detroit's Central Methodist Church; Dr. Ewart Turner, former pastor of the American Church in Berlin; Dr. Herman Sweet of the International Council of Religious Education, and Mrs. Paul Erdman, wife of the managing editor of the American Mission Press, Beirut, Syria.

Representative Walter H. Judd of Minnesota, one-time medical missionary to China, and Dr. Crane will address a night mass meeting at First Congregational Church, where the choruses of American and Howard Universities will sing. Dr. Sweet and Dr. Turner will address an evening rally at Mount Vernon Place Methodist Church, arranged by the Washington Federation of Christian Youth, and the Navy Chorus will sing. Additional programs are being arranged in colleges and high schools.

Mrs. Coffee, Sourilas Win Bridge Event

By Marian H. Barre

After a feeble start in the opening session, Mrs. John Coffee, wife of the Congressman from Seattle, and James Sourilas of this city surged upward in the finals to win the mixed-pair championship of the District of Columbia last night. It was the third event in the thirteenth annual bridge tournament and was held at the Shoreham Hotel.

Scoring a total of 316 match points, the winners had a 7-point lead over Mrs. Edward Cotter and Ensign Richard Block, another local partnership. All five top positions went to Washington players, Mrs. J. R. Belt and Dr. N. J. McHugh finishing third with 307½; Mrs. Dora Schwartz and I. H. York, fourth, 306, and Mrs. William Tidball and Col. E. B. Gray, fifth with 305½.

These scores are unusually close. They continued that way down to tenth position, which was separated from top by only 15 points. Fifty pairs took part in the game, half of the field being made up of visiting luminaries, who were swamped by District talent.

In the dual events played yesterday, Mrs. M. Linderman and Mrs. W. H. Gorton continued in the partnership which finished second in the women's game to win the intermediate event, carrying the beautiful Evening Star trophy. The ladies came up from eighth place, repeating the tactics of Mrs. Coffee and Sourilas.

Protest period for the open pair championship had not expired at a late hour last night. Leaders in the qualifying session were A. L. Westrich and H. R. King, Washington top north-south in section A; Mrs. Irene Surguy and Gene Hermann, Washington, in Section B; Mrs. Frank Meyer and Dr. Arthur Salasky of Richmond; and Mrs. I. Zeskind, Baltimore, paired with I. M. Lake of this city. King and Westrich had the highest carry-over score.

Thirty-two pairs qualified for the finals after the field was reduced following the afternoon elimination round.

If a Woman Takes a Wee Snifter, Is She Ipso Facto A Disreputable Person? This Kind of Thinking Marks Nazi Mentality, Says Riled Correspondent

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I was so incensed by last Monday's letter from Miss Goody Twoshoes that I decided to drag my trusty typewriter out of its dusty case and write MY opinion. Ah, me! Would I had the perspicacity to masterfully operate this infernal machine—. But I digress. I was speaking about M. B., as she so coyly signs herself. If she will give me the address of the Ivory Tower in which she dwells, I will send her a copy of "Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme,"—in the English translation, of course. I will also send her a book by John O'Hara, called "Butterfield 8." It is about a "disreputable woman,"—which ought to be real exciting and enlightening for M. B. I gather that M. B. has learned about life from reading Emily Post and Edgar Guest.

By her definition of Who's Who, M. B. would have us believe that a woman is ipso facto "of the lower class" because she lives with a man to whom she is not legally bound; and that a woman is per se "disreputable" because she takes a wee snifter. Of course, M. B. is entitled to her opinion. But the tragedy of her rigid, unrealistic moralizing lies not in the fact that she zealously presses her views on her muddled friend; and also on the public, through your column; but, rather, that she and her ilk have made such smug sermonizing well-nigh universal. Racial prejudice, religious persecution, exploitation of labor, etc., are all vigorously upheld and defended by the small-minded "aristocrats" of M. B.'s type. They do more damage to the world at large, by minding other people's business, than a plague of seven-year locusts could do in two months.

I am not writing a brief for my conduct, in this respect. I happen to be married, with all the conventional trimmings; and I am in love with my husband. And the main reason why I am in love with him is because he is the most tolerant, far-seeing person I know. But I haven't enough of his tolerance to sit silent in the face of M. B.'s letter. Let's send this Mrs. Grundy to Russia. They would swallow her up faster than we can; and their digestion is undoubtedly tougher.

G. B. N.

Here Is a Champion Of 'Bigoted Busybody'

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Your column has always interested me. It is the first thing I read in the morning paper. I have always found your judgment to be characterized by intelligence, balance and thorough research. It was a great disappointment, therefore, to read,—on October 25,—your blunt condemnation of Bigoted Busybody's kind advice to her friend, to the effect that a woman who wants the respect of nice people cannot afford to spend time in drinking establishments, nor in the company of persons who drink.

THERE IS no one who is a greater champion of "rugged individualism" than I. Emerson has long been my favorite American philosopher. During the last 18 years, since I first read his Essay on Self-Reliance, I have found strength and inspiration there. I don't think anyone can afford to be without that whisper of self-direction, which another early American writer, William Cullen Bryant, refers to in his poem, To a Waterfowl: "He who, from zone to zone, guides through the boundless sky thy certain flight, In the long way that I must tread alone, will lead my steps aright." Nonetheless, I think M. B. was justified in expressing her opinion of her friend's unladylike conduct; and I think it is a splendid thing that she is sufficiently interested in that friend's welfare to do so. Furthermore, I think her views on social drinking are excellent; and that she was not being officious, but proving her friendship, in speaking frankly. As for your conclusion that she is a busybody, one cannot use the same measuring stick for judging behavior in every instance. To quote William James: "Whatever works in the world of experience is good."

She Carefully Avoids People Who Drink

THOUGH I loathe a meddler, and am a strong believer in "going to hell in my own way," I think I would appreciate a friend such as M. B. How often we all wish that we had some sympathetic person to tell us just what is wrong with our lives. In my opinion, M. B. shows herself to be such a person. I feel she performed a great service to humanity by speaking straight from the heart to her friend. In fact, she is trying to do something for another that I would not be able to do,—because I don't drink and I would not care to associate with the sort of woman she describes in her letter. There has been a city-wide evangelist program in Washington this week; and in the words of one of the evangelists, "There is no greater thing anybody can do than to lead men to God." And if you, Miss Haworth, express ambiguous sentiments in your column,—as in chiding M. B. for her helpful efforts,—you may perchance leave your readers in doubt as to ethical standards.

CHAMPION OF M. B.

Martha Ellyn's Platter Chatter

Doesn't this dish look as if you had used selected choice meats and made a delicious beef loaf. It is a delicious dish, but without one ounce of meat. This dish is called Boston Roast and made from the recipe given in Barbara Rae's newly released cookbook, "Cooking Without Meat." Dried kidney beans, grated cheese and bread crumbs are the main ingredients used

No need to get panicky when meat has to be replaced on the dinner menu. Meeting standard health requirements doesn't necessarily mean that beefsteak, lamb chops, pork roast or veal cutlets have to appear as the main dish.

Martha Ellyn

If you would like to have a splendid assembling of recipes at your fingertips for cooking without meat, you will appreciate a newly released book, "Cooking Without Meat," by Barbara Rae. Over 150 new and revised recipes for meatless dishes and appetizing sauces are given in this book.

Special attention is given to the five primary meat alternates—milk, eggs, cheese, legumes and nuts—in recipes that carry a full complement of vitamins, minerals and proteins without benefit of meat.

If you want your meals to be appetizing without help from the butcher, you will find recipes for such appetizing dishes as given today in this column. These recipes are taken from this book.

In the chapter, "Cheese for Meatless Days," are given the following suggestions concerning this food.

"To vary your servings of cheese, experiment with different kinds. Smoked cheese, for instance, adds a special tang to baked macaroni, and it melts easily, too. The best cheese for grating is either Parmesan or Romano, and for best results, grate it yourself. Ready-grated cheese is a disappointment compared to the home-grated variety."

The following is a recipe the author gives for using dried kidney beans and grated cheese to make a roast with a different accent:

BOSTON ROAST

Soak 1½ cups dried kidney beans for 24 hours. Cook until soft in water with 3 tablespoons salt. Drain and mash or chop the beans. Mix in 3 tablespoons chopped onion, 1 to 2 cups grated cheese, 1 cup bread crumbs and ½ cup milk. Add more salt if necessary and put in a greased loaf pan. Bake at 350 degrees for 40 minutes.

A delicious main dish can be made by using Mrs. Rae's recipe for Cheese and Nut Loaf. The recipe follows:

CHEESE AND NUT LOAF

Cut ½ pound American cheese into small pieces and mix with 1 cup chopped walnuts, 2 cups soft bread crumbs, 1 1-3 cups milk and 2 beaten eggs. Set aside while 4 tablespoons minced onion is fried to a golden brown in 2 tablespoons cooking oil or fat. Cmbine the onion with the first mixture and add 2 teaspoons lemon juice, ½ teaspoon dried marjoram and salt and pepper as desired. Stir well. Bake in greased casserole or loaf pan set in hot water for 40 to 50 minutes at 375 degrees. This loaf should be served with a gravy, preferably tomato.

YOUR FIGURE, MADAME!

By Ida Jean Kain

Do you want to know how much exercise it takes to lose a measly quarter of a pound of weight? This will give you an idea: In the recent elevator strike at Radio City, the unfortunates who worked 50 stories up had to climb about 1000 stairsteps. That was a brave stint and it left most of them completely exhausted, but it only used about a thousand calories. If they didn't make up those calories at the next meal, that would have meant a quarter of a pound off.

None of us intend climbing that many stairs—not even the golden stairs. But it goes to prove exercise is the tough way to reduce. What you have to do is give up the high calorie foods. Desserts should be the first to go in your menus not only because they are so calorifically high but because they contribute so little to the diet aside from calories—and the pleasure in eating them!

You may have to give yourself quite a sales talk in order to give up desserts. One argument might be: Do I want that cherry tart and whipped cream, or do I want to be able to slip into a size 16? And then you might take a psychological tip from the economically minded young man who, just before taking his current girl into a restaurant, would inquire if she hadn't taken on a little weight. It never failed. The girl always ordered lightly.

With food curtailment, the menus shift over to the starches, and starches come under the heading of carbohydrates. When you add sweets to a diet high in starch, you add the pounds fast. Cut out the desserts and cut down on the starches and you can lose equally fast. And don't imagine for an instant that you can get the same effect by going without your main part of the meal in order to have dessert. It won't do. That brings on hidden hunger—you will discover you are hungry almost all the time. Actually, this craving is for the missing nutrients which are not supplied in desserts.

Interpretation in Simplicity

Here is an outstanding American designer's interpretation in simplicity.

It's a dress made of black wool rayon jersey that drapes gracefully to flatter your figure. The front insert is soft yellow or red. The back has been designed as carefully—no insert for a smooth line and a soft flare to the skirt that gives you a slim silhouette.

It's more than basic—it's a background dress that makes a flattering and colorful setting but doesn't steal hte show. It's beauty is in the simplicity of its high neckline and the soft full drape of the skirt. These do the work while you get the credit.

A good dress investment is one that pays dividends: There's no letdown when you take off your fur coat and it is a perfect companion for your Chesterfield. It's timeless lines insure no hibernation period while it waits for a fashion "revival" and it will be the last thing you put in moth balls come summer.

It's a dress that you'll feel at ease in. You'll wear it to the office and wear it dancing, with no excuses.

This dress doesn't announce, "Here I am—all dressed up!" Yet it has a smart unstudied look that is in good taste when there's a war going on. It rousees approval, but not whistles.

And of course you know all the answers to why black and jersey are so wonderful—

It's the most effective blackout for concealing any "variations" from perfection.

It doesn't protest when you add a scarf, a piece of jewelry, a flower.

You can sit in it all day, and it won't wrinkle."

It has our vote of approval; it's a good dress. Under $30.

Doctor Should Prescribe Daily Diet for Patients

By Logan Clendening, M. D.

A practicing doctor would no more say to a patient, "Oh! take a little belladonna every once in a while," than he would fly. (No—"fly" is obsolete—than he would try to turn green.) Belladonna is used in medicine and it has good uses. But it is also poisonous if used too much. Besides, there is tincture of belladonna, and belladonna radix, and emplastum of belladonna, and unguentum of belladonna, and fluid extract of belladonna, to say nothing of atropine, which is a derivative of belladonna.

No, he takes a piece of paper called a prescription blank, which, by the way, has a long history itself, and is made up of different parts, and he writes on it exactly the kind of belladonna he wants this patient to have, how often and under what circumstances, and then if he is any good he explains to the patient what he has written and makes the patient repeat so as to understand.

Prescriptions for Diets

But what does he do when they ask him what they shall eat? He gets up and pats them on the shoulder and says, "Oh! you know all about that." So they do as they please.

Not only that, but the grocer gets no scientific training. The prescription is taken to a pharmacist who has spent three years learning what his drugs are, but all the education the grocer gets is from his boss or what he learns in a commercial geography.

Now I am against all this. I believe that prescriptions for diets are just as important as prescriptions for drugs.

The diet prescription should be divided into five parts: One for proteins, one for carbohydrates (vegetables, fruits, starches, sugars, etc.), one for fats, one for minerals and one for vitamins. If a person can eat only 60 per cent of his meals in the form of carbohydrates or only 75 per cent in protein on account of either diabetes or Bright's disease the card will say so.

A Personal Diet

Then an important part of the dietary prescription is the foods to which the patient is sensitive, either because they give him indigestion, diarrhea or skin eruptions. The details are not so complicated. In fact, I have a form on my desk now.

It goes like this: For Mrs. Jones—

Breakfast—Light.

Protein—Not more than one egg.

Bacon—None.

Oatmeal—Half a teaspoonful, very well cooked.

Coffee—As much as she wants.

Minerals—Just what is in the egg and oatmeal.

Lunch—

Cheese—Small serving cottage cheese.

Meat—Lean meat or fowl.

Vegetables—Any vegetable on back of this list—two tablespoonfuls.

Fruit—One serving.

Minerals—Just what she gets in meats, vegetables.

Vitamins—Just what she gets in the meat, cheese and vegetables—A, B, C and D.

Supper:

Protein—One medium serving meat or fowl.

Vegetables—Any listed on back of this prescription—one tablespoonful.

Fats—None.

Note: Avoid at all times sausages, chocolate, nuts, bananas or tomatoes.

Your Baby and Mine

By Myrtle Meyer Eldred

When the baby stands up early in life and waddles perilously about its crib or playpen, mothers are always worried that this will result in bowlegs.

Let us remember that bowlegs are the result of rickets, and rickets is a disease advertising poor or inadequate feeding and lack of vitamin D. The child with such deficiencies seldom is the one who shows much activities demanding bony strength, so he would not be the baby who lifted himself to his feet and made attempts to walk, early in life.

No matter what the baby's age, when he begins to walk around, especially on the hard floor, he needs shoes to protect his feet. The best type is a soft, high shoe, with a flexible sole and fastened firmly to the foot by lacings. He should practice his walking in a playpen or crib rather than in a riding toy, which keeps him active but does not promote his ability to practice balance and thereby learn to walk.

Mrs. A. E.: Before this letter could appear here I am sure you must have seen the article on sleeping bags as the answer to children getting uncovered at night. That is for your baby who sleeps alone. The other children who sleep together and are restless should wear footed-nighties and, if very cold, an extra heavy kimona over this. Then if the covers get kicked off, the children won't get frigid before you discover it.

Our leaflet, "Sleeping Habits," contains a description of an envelope-type sleeping bag. Send a 3-cent stamped, self-addressed envelope with your request to Myrtle Meyer Eldred in care of this newspaper.

Look Out for Fire Hazards

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin

A fire is always a tragedy—but never would that be more true than now when so many more of our things are irreplaceable, when rebuilding is all but impossible. Most fires, we're told, are preventable, so it behooves us all to check up on our own premises and see if we're doing all we can to avoid fire hazards. The priority boards aren't a bit lenient about appeals from those whose fires were caused by carelessness.

The salvage program should have made a big dent on junk piles in attics and basements—always distressing fire hazards. But such stuff accumulates fast—just because you went on a grand sorting spreess last spring is no sign that there may not be more hazards piled up again by now. In other words, not only clean up that storage glory-hole, but keep it straight and cleared.

Then there's the little but important matter of keeping up with your chimneys and flues to be sure there aren't cracks or flaws that invite fires. And provide plenty of big ash trays if there are smokers on the place. For 'tis said that 15 per cent of contemporary fires are bgun with cigarettes. We're taking it for granted that you have your electric wiring checked at reasonable interludes and keep your electric appliances in good condition.

In addition to all these precautions, there are other more aggressive ideas. Such as a flame-proofing liquid that is good for protecting curtains or spreads—important if there are habitual absent-minded smokers in the family. And a fire extinguisher is a good idea to have in reach. The new kind is a container of powder which you sprinkle on the fire to extinguish it instantly; it is safe and simple, will keep, won't freeze or evaporate.

If you do have a fire, half the battle is in discovering it early. An automatic alarm is the trick here—it senses even a concealed fire very early in its progress and makes a fuss about it.

Must I Change My Hair Style?

That's the question all style-minded women are asking. Whether to be in style but unhappy (and probably unbeautiful) in the new flat-on-top hair-do or to let well enough alone and continue with the style that's old faithful.

We went to an expert on the subject, a Frenchman who designs coiffures of the times and who is director of the hair department of a famous beauty salon. His name is Michel.

Michel says, "I believe in the short hair-do. Today we want things very simple and very easy to take care of, but also very feminine."

Today's styles are a renaissance from 1926, when women went overboard on the shingle cut, remember? The new hair-dos are much softer, not so mannish, yet not fancy! We are at war and elaborate hairdresses are ridiculously out of tune.

It's too true that many of us guard an old hair-do as closely as we do our virtue. It does take a bit of courage to change (especially if the scissors are involved). But as Michel says, "We are a young country and not afraid of new ideas . . . every woman should have an individual coiffure."

Sketched are two styles he designed that look soft and simple enough for daytime wear and are feminine enough for the most formal occasions.

They don't require an "every-hair-in-place" look. You'll look as smart at 6 p. m. as you did at 9 a. m. They're easy to take care of and they don't misbehave the moment you turn your back.

They're youthful.

We like them!

Round of Parties on Calendar Foretell a Busy Autumn Season

Mrs. Edward McLean Gives Large Dinner; Halloween Party at Mexican Embassy

By Marie McNair

Round the town yesterday it seemed that practically everybody had an open door.

There was Mrs. Edward B. McLean's big dinner—almost 200 guests at Friendship last night; there was another evening party at the Mexican Embassy with Senorita Ofelia Davila, niece of the Mexican Ambassador, Dr. Francisco Castillo Najera, entertaining some of her young friends for Halloween; Dr. and Mrs. Tomas Cajigas gave an afternoon party as a farewell to the retiring Ambassador of the Dominican Republic and Senora de Troncoso, and Mrs. William Pope Anderson 3d entertained at cocktails at her home on Massachusetts ave. from 6 to 8 o'clock, with many guests lingering on well after that. A much feted visitor from New York who was entertained yesterday is Mrs. Sally Cobb Barton, guest of Mrs. Dorothy Lee Ward. Mrs. Barton came down for the Navy Day dinner, stayed on because she has found Washington so completely fascinating, but will leave tomorrow night for Atlanta, Ga., where she also has a home. Last night Mrs. Ward entertained at dinner for Mrs. Barton at the Sulgrave Club, with Maj. Gen. and Mrs. Irving Phillipson as ranking guests, and earlier she invited a few friends in for cocktails to meet her guest. Today Mrs. Marsden Perry will entertain at luncheon for Mrs. Barton and tomorrow Mrs. Irving Phillipson will have a luncheon at the Army and Navy Club also in honor of the visitor.

Diplomats, Politicians Among the Guests

But going back to the doings of the day.

There was no end of stimulating conversation at Mrs. McLean's dinner party for there were diplomats, politicians, authors, entertainers in the gathering.

The British Ambassador, Viscount Halifax, back only a few days from England, was in the company. Also the Cuban Ambassador and Senora de Concheso, the Chinese Ambassador and Mme. Wei, Justice and Mrs. Stanley Reed, Justice and Mrs. William O. Douglas, Justice Frank Murphy and from Capitol Hill, Senator Arthur Capper, Senator and Mrs. Burton K. Truman, with Mrs. Truman and their daughter, Miss Margaret Truman, Senator and Mrs. Arthur Vandenberg, Senator Theodore Green, Senator and Mrs. Burnet Maybank, Representative Edith Nourse Rogers, Representative and Mrs. Charles Dewey, Representative and Mrs. Albert Thomas, Representative Clare Boothe Luce with her husband Henry Luce.

The Egyptian Minister and Mme. Hassan were guests, and former Ambassador to the Soviet Union, Admiral William H. Standley, and Mrs. Standley; Gov. Ingram Stainback of Hawaii and Mrs. Stainback, Air Marshal Sir William Welsh, were others

Such sparkling personalities as Lucius Boomer and Mrs. Boomer, Miss Beth Leary and Miss Dickey Fellowes Gordon came down from New York for the occasion, and Miss Elsa Maxwell, a frequent guest at Friendship, also was there. Mr. and Mrs. Malcolm Muir of New York and Mr. and Mrs. Charles Hoff of Baltimore swelled the out-of-town group.

Resident Society Well Represented

Then there were the strictly "resident society" contingent represented by former Senator and Mrs. Hiram Bingham, Col. and Mrs. Snowden Fahnestock, Mrs. John F. Wilkins, Clarence Hewes, Mr. and Mrs. George Garrett, Mrs. William E. Borah, Mrs. Louis Atwill, Dr. Kemper Simpson, Pendleton Turner, the perennial bachelor; Mrs. Mitchell Palmer, Mrs. Edward Everett Gann, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Bruce Howe, Mrs. George Holmes, Mrs. Rose Wallach Merriam, Mrs. Frederick Sterling Ward Brown, Mrs. Warren Delano Robbins, Mrs. Frank West, Mr. and Mrs. David E. Edward Macauley, William Jenkins, Col. John Lowry, Miss Katharine Brooks, Col. Douglas Parmentier, Mrs. Eleanor Patterson, Cornelius Vanderbilt, Eliot Wadsworth, and Lothrop Stoddard.

Guests in Costume At Mexican Embassy

There was singing and dancing at the Mexican Embassy at Senorita Davila's Halloween party. The guests numbering about 100, all came in costume. The hostess was black-faced for the evening and Senora de Castillo came as her "mammy." All the members of the staff and their wives surprised each other in various costumes inspired by the occasion and the fete went on 'til the early morning hours.

Stopping in at Mrs. William P. Anderson's yesterday, guests found themselves staying on, enjoying pleasant company, a drink and a bite to eat.

Here and there were Senora de Michels, wife of the Chilean Ambassador; the Minister of Thailand and Mme. Pramoj, Gen. and Mrs. Joseph Byron, Lady Bajpai, Mme. Sze, Col. Senator Buck's Daughter Is Wed to Officer

It was almost a Republican quorum that Senator C. Douglass Buck gathered together last Friday at New Castle, Del.

The Senator, who took his seat in the Senate for the first time last January, had invited his eight colleagues — Republican Senators who came into office at the same time—for the wedding of his daughter, Miss Dorcas VanDyke Buck, and Capt. Donald Keith Farquhar, Army Air Forces, at New Castle.

But only four of the special senatorial group invited were able to be present at the ceremony. They were Senator Kenneth Wherry and Mrs. Wherry, Senator Chapman Revercomb and Mrs. Revercomb, Senator Harlan Bushfield and Mrs. Bushfield, and Senator Albert W. Hawkes and Mrs. Hawkes.

Senator and Mrs. Buck are expected back in Washington today after spending the weekend at their home in Buena Vista, Del. Senator and Mrs. Hawkes were at their home in New Jersey for the weekend and the remainder of the party returned to Washington on Saturday.

The wedding ceremony was held in the Immanuel Church-on the Green, with the Rev. Andrew E. F. Anderson officiating. A reception took place afterward at the home of Senator and Mrs. Buck. The bride had as her attendants Miss Alice du Pont Wilson as maid of honor and Mrs. Paul E. Wilson was matron of honor. Bridesmaids included the Misses Ellen du Pont Meeds, Renee du Pont Meeds, Phoebe Lyman du Pont of Wilmington, Gretna du Pont Brown of Port Deposit, Md.; Nancy B. Donaldson of Millbrook, N. Remmel, Capt. Frederick S. Gundlach, Capt. Henry R. Johnson, Capt. Mathew H. Erkle and Lieut. Cecil D. Gray, all of the Army Air Forces.

After a wedding trip, Captain and Mrs. Farquhar will live at Rokeby, near Wilmington, Del.

Mrs. Septimus Bonham Sightler, jr. (at top) who with her husband, Lieutenant Colonel Sightler, will return soon from their honeymoon to make their home at 3933 Fourth st., Arlington, Va. The former Miss Margaret Mary Wheatley, daughter of H. Winship Wheatley, president of the District of Columbia Bar Association, and Mrs. Wheatley of Hyattsville, and Lieutenant Schmitt, USNR, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Schmitt, were married at a 9:30 morning ceremony with the Rev. Edward H. Roach officiating.

The bride was given in marriage by her father, and was gowned in white brocade with sweetheart neckline, fashioned princess style, with long sleeves, pointed at the wrists, and a full length train. She carried a white prayer book to which was pinned a shower spray of white orchids.

Mrs. Robert G. Fuerst, sister of the bride, was the matron of honor and was gowned in wine taffeta and carried yellow chrysanthemums. Lawrence Schmitt, USMC, brother of the bridegroom, was the best man and there were no ushers.

Following the ceremony there was a reception at the home of the bride's parents. When the couple left for their wedding trip the bride was wearing a frock of airplane blue with brown accessories.

Miss Lillian Sholz of Mass. Is Bride of Bernard Hammett

Mr. and Mrs. Bernard T. Hammett, whose marriage took place on Saturday in Gardner, Mass., will make their home at 1007 North Mansion dr., Silver Spring, Md., following their wedding trip. The bride is the former Miss Lillian A. Sholz, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Anton Sholz of Gardner. Mr. Hammett, whose home is in Washington, is supervisor of transportation of the Railway Express Agency.

The Rev. George E. Keith performed the ceremony which was held in St. Paul's Church at 4 o'clock and Mr. Sholz gave his daughter in marriage. The bride's gown was of pale turquois crepe de chine with a gold metal belt. She wore a matching hat and veil and a corsage bouquet of white orchids.

Mrs. W. Olmstead Wright, sister of the bride, from Chicago, was matron of honor, wearing a forest green crepe de chine gown with pearls and crystal edging the neckline. She wore a brown velvet calot and veil and carried a brown velvet muff covered with sweetheart roses.

Edwin L. Sholz of Chicago served as best man and ushers were Bertram G. Sholz of Detroit and Howard A. Sholz of Providence, R. I. A reception at the home of the bride's parents followed the ceremony. Miss Helen L. Bruce and Miss Grace E. Rideout of Boston assisted in receiving.

Sr. Hernandez Returns From Trip to South

Francisco Hernandez, chief of the travel division of the Pan American Union, looks to a marked increase in inter-American travel by land, air and sea, when the war shall cease.

Just back from a trip to a number of Latin American countries, Senor Hernandez found government officials and tourist associations of those countries anticipating a great flux of visitors once the war is over and normal travel conditions again prevail.

Senor Hernandez' trip took him from Mexico through the Central American republics to Panama and from there to Cuba. His chief object was to make new contacts and to study the enormous inter-American travel possibilities of the future. Senor Hernandez declared it was especially important "to find solutions to the many problems that are bound to arise as soon as the postwar travel boom starts automobiles rolling over the Pan American Highway." Problems of transportation and of lodging, among others, are to be solved in readiness for the unusual tourist activity that will take plac in Latin America as soon as the war is over.

In the counrties where there are as yet no travel bureaus to facilitate the exchange of travelers and handle tourist publicity, Senor Hernandez has been promoting the organization of these centers. They will collaborate with his own travel division at the Pan American Union, which serves as a clearing house of information for prospective travelers, laws and regulations governing the entry of foreigners into Latin-American countries, and travel publicity for Latin Americans wishing to visit the United States and vice versa.

Seven Cavanaughs—Once a Dance Troupe—Now Occupied on the War and Home Fronts

Takoma Park Family Once Headed for Hollywood, Broadway

By Betty Ruth McDevitt

The Cavanaugh Caperettes" as they were known to thousands of Washingtonians whom they entertained with song and dance routines, have forsaken their stage talents to play the roles of soldier, war worker, Red Cross medical secretary, and mother, in real life.

Just a few seasons ago the five beautiful daughters and two sons of Dr. and Mrs. Leo M. Cavanaugh of Takoma Park, Md., were headed for Broadway and Hollywood. But war and cupid changed their careers so that now they are scattered all over the country and even abroad. Over a period of 12 years the troupe was a drawing card whenever an organization wanted to "pack the house."

All but two of the girls are married to men deep in the throes of pushing toward victory, and the remaining ones are noming their own on important war jobs. As for the brothers, the elder is in the Army and the younger is in high school.

Mother of Group Cares for Children

Instead of escorting the "Caperettes" about the city and country—for she never missed a performance—Mrs. Cavanaugh now portrays the picture of a wartime grandmother busy as a bee caring for her dancing daughters' children. Often she travels to and from distant cities bringing the youngsters home while their mothers follow their husbands.

Keeping pace with the rest of the family, Dr. Cavanaugh, a major in the last war, is with the Veterans' Administration but still finds time to serve as first aid instructor. In fact, all the Cavanaughs took first aid except Mrs. Cavanaugh, who, as a trained nurse and graduate of St. Joseph's Hospital in Baltimore, found it just as interesting to be a spectator at first aid classes.

Jean Cavanaugh Was 'Miss Washington'

Probably the best known of the "Caperettes" was Jean, now Mrs. Harry M. Kimball. Holder of the title of "Miss Washington for 1941" she took third place as runner-up for "Miss America" the same year. After she became a Powers' model she turned down a Hollywood contract to marry Mr. Kimball, assistant director of the FBI in New York. They have a 6-month-old daughter, Joan.

Then there's Betty who, Mrs. Cavanaugh says, was the "most talented" in acrobatic numbers. Audiences were amazed when they watched Betty stretch out on the floor, flat on her back with a glass of tomato juice on her forehead, arise to a standing position and never spill a drop. The wife of Bernard Cook of the Department of Justice, she has a 10-month-old baby, Catherine Marie.

Helen Cavanaugh, still single, gave up a position with a Washintgon firm to go to England as a medical secretary with the American Red Cross. Before her assignment overseas she put in 300 hours as a nurse's aide.

Now awaiting orders of her husband, Ensign Wade Hampton Skinner, USNR, who was graduated a few days ago from the Naval Photographic School in Pensacola, Fla., Mary Lee will soon be on her way to another station. Mrs. Cavanaugh returned last week from Scranton, Pa., to bring back their 3½-year-old child, Helen Veronica, who was staying with other relatives. Their son, Wade, jr., is in a nursery school in Virginia.

The piano accompanist for the troupe was Anne, the eldest, now Mrs. Carl De Mello, whose children, Elizabeth, 10, and Bobbie, 7, often stay with their grandparents while Anne works at the Washington office of a well-known movie company.

Her husband left a few days ago for Richmond, Calif., to work for the Kaiser Shipbuilding Co. If his survey of housing conditions on the West Coast proves favorable he will be joined by his family; otherwise Grandma Cavanaugh will add two more youngsters to her home.

Five Daughters Are Now Married to Men at the Front

Youngest Daughter In Justice Department

Seventeen-year-old Frances, youngest of the girls, is employed in the Department of Justice. John, 18, is a private, serving with military police at Aberdeen, Md. Last but not least is Leo 2d, 15, who, at the age of 3 years, was a feature of the song-and-dance team. A student at Gonzaga High School, his spare time goes to designing and constructing model airplanes.

Talents of the "Caperettes" are undoubtedly inherited from Mrs. Cavanaugh. Back in the cakewalk days she won wide acclaim when she danced with her brother. A native of Petersburg, Va., Mrs. Cavanaugh turned to nursing for her career thus meeting Dr. Cavanaugh, a practicing physician before World War I. They have lived in Takoma Park for 20 years.

Turkish Ambassador and Mme. Ertegun Among the Guests of Mr. and Mrs. Howar

If Superman, with his X-ray vision had looked through the walls of a home on Linnean ave. on Saturday night, he might have thought he was seeing the court of Caliph Haroun al Raschid, for the scene was more like one out of Arabian Nights, than anything heretofore seen in Washington.

To put it in prosaic fashion, it was a dinner given by Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Howar in honor of the Princes of Saudi Arabia, His Royal Highness Amir Faisal, Crown Prince of Saudi Arabia, who is also foreign minister; and his brother, His Royal Highness Amir Khalid. Other guests of honor included Shikh Hafiz Wahba, the Saudi Arabian Minister to London, who acts as interpreter for the party, and three members of the princes' entourage.

But the thing that made this party different from any others given for the princes since their arrival in this country, was that it was given in true Arabian fashion, such a party as would be given for them in their own land, even to the type of food and entertainment. And the pleased smiles on their royal highnesses faces during t' entire evening showed how much they appreciated this touch of home.

Mr. Howar, who was, by the way, one of the members of the Arabic-speaking reception committee who welcomed the Princes at Blair House when they arrived, is a native of Palestine (as is his wife) though he has made his home in Washington for the past 40 years.

A description of the banquet and the food would be almost impossible to convey in words, but highlights of the evening were, that though there were over a hundred and fifty guests, the only ones seated at tables were Their Royal Highnesses and the Ambassadors and the latters' wives. The rest were served from buffets and stood as they ate. After the ceremony of the meal there were speeches and songs in Arabic.

Among those who attended were the Turkish Ambassador Mehmet Munir Ertegun and Mme. Ertegun, The Minister of Iran Mohammed Shayesteh and Mme Shayesteh, and the Minister of Iraq Ali Jawdat and Mme. Jawdat, and their daughter, Miss Selwa Jawdat. Also attending were the secretaries, counselors and military attaches of those countries and their wives.

Ensign and Mrs. Robert B. Stewart are now making their home in Washington following a brief honeymoon in the Blue Ridge Mountains.

The former Miss Frances Jacobson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. F. D. Jacobson of Marshall, Minn., and Ensign Stewart, USNR, son of Mr. and Mrs. Stanley P. Stewart of Colby, Wash., were married recently at a ceremony in the ballroom of Scotts Hotel in Washington. Lieut. Eric T. Braund of the Chaplain Corps, USNR, officiated at the ceremony.

The bride was given in marriage by her father and was gowned in white satin, fashioned with a fitted bodice and a full, tiered skirt. Her fingertip veil of illusion fell from a pearl tiara, and she carried a bouquet of white roses with bouvardia streamers. Her only ornament was a crystal necklace, a gift from the bridegroom.

Miss Arline Jacobson, sister of the bride, was the maid of honor and Miss Anne Jennings was the bridesmaid. They were gowned in mousseline de soie, and wore Juliet caps and gold necklaces which were gifts of the bride.

Ensign Erwin Johnson, USNR, was the best man and the ushers were Pvt. Robert Burczycki, Lieut. (j. g.) Alfred J. Frueh, USNR, and Lieut. (j. g.) Myrl McKee, USNR. A reception followed the ceremony.

Mrs. John Monks To Make Home Here For Duration

Joining Washington's "duration-dwellers" is Mrs. John Monks, who has forsaken her native New York. Her reason for moving is that "all my friends are in Washington. Her husband is now in Panama.

Other New Yorkers expected here—but only for a visit—are Lieut. Nelson T. Levings, USNR, and Mrs. Levivngs, who are now at the Farmington Country Club at Charlottesville, Va. Lieutenant Levings is enjoying his first leave of the war. Joining the Levings in Washington will be Col. George E. Levings, USA, stationed at West Point, a brother of Lieutenant Levings.

MEN ARE PEOPLE, TOO

Even as you and I . . . and a shade better than you and I when it comes to punctuality, if all the old wives' tales are to be believed.

Male awareness of the importance of keeping business appointments, meeting trains and planes, or even little Junior whom you've sent downtown to meet his Father for a haircut, has long been a recognized fact, lauded and applauded.

But there's another recognized fact, gentlemen, just half explained by C. C. Moore, when he wrote " 'twas the night before Christmas and all through the house, not a creature was stirring, not even a mouse." That's all right as far as it goes, but the reason there was no one a-stir is because everyone else had finished up and gone to bed, while Father was still out shopping.

He had got started about noon that very day . . . with the help of his secretary and a few professional shoppers had accomplished quite a little. At this very moment he was frantically scouring the town for some more track for the boys' train, tearing in and out of florists' shops for the least bedraggled poinsettia . . . finally settling for a dozen roses. Santa's little last-minute-helper; bless his heart.

Well, Hairbreadth Harry, we're putting it squarely up to you this season. Either you mend your ways and "Shop Early" like Uncle Samuel says, or you'll be a sorry Santa.

There's enough of everything to go 'round this year, but it's first come, first served, and we've no assurance of replacements. So if you're banking on your usual routine, you'd better right-about-face and start now to think of your Christmas gift list . . .

"Miss Jones, take a memo to me . . . uh, try to keep in mind to go over to Garfinckel's every other day or so and get started on Christmas Shopping"

'Learn From Russia'

By George W. Babson

Capitalism vs. Communism

Great events have been going on at Moscow. Let us hope that the leaders of the three nations represented will have faith and courage enough to agree. Three things are true: (1) That so-called "permanent peace" can come only when the world is under one powerful government. (2) That this cannot at once come about but will take many generations. (3) That it is now possible to divide the world into three spheres of influence: The United States, responsible for the Western Hemisphere; Great Britain, responsible for Europe; and Russia, responsible for Asia and the Far East.

Let us assume that World War II brings about these three spheres of power. This should give us peace for many years. Within 50 years from now, however, these three groups will get fighting among themselves which will result in knocking out one of them. One hundred years from now the two remaining groups will get into war and one will whip the other. That nation will then rule the world and there will be real peace.

Different sections will try—at different times—to get free, and civil wars or insurrections will take place; but they will always be put down. Gradually some form of universal democracy will develop but it surely will not be our "survival-of-the-weakest" brand which we are sponsoring today by the "Atlantic Charter." At least, this is what Stalin is today telling Cordell Hull and Anthony Eden.

Religion will also be a determining factor in bringing about world peace. Yet we hear very little about religion today in the council of nations. In short, the nation or race which has the best religion will in the end come out "top dog." This, however, will be the religion which teaches its followers that good land, good children, and good brains, as well as good character, are the assets worth while. Money, planes, tanks, and battleships will not save America. The only way we can hold down the Japs is by raising more and better children than they do.

The curse of the democracies is the desire for an "easy life" combined with so-called "security." Yet these two things never went together and never will. Britain cannot survive living on dominated colonies, nor can the United States survive if our college graduates are content with less than three children. The hope of every nation lies in good soil, large families, and good male providers. The more who till their own land and the fewer who live on inherited wealth, the better the Nation will be. We will never develop a strong race so long as so much of our radio time is devoted to teaching people to take pills instead of to live properly, or to worship soft hands instead of hard work.

Now, "What has Moscow to say about investments?" you ask. Well, I'll tell you: Stalin's program should teach us to invest our money in good land and in useful enterprises, avoiding big cities; to be content with a moderate rate of income and not speculate. The main result of World War II will be to make us all more realistic, for which change we may thank Moscow.

Notwithstanding some false economic ideas which Russia practices, Stalin has cut out fakes, wastes and speculation. Let us do the same. But stocks only when price paid is less than the actual book value. When considering investments we should not merely ask, "How much is a company earning or paying?" Let us also ask, "How much useful service is it rendering?"

As I look out of my window I see two families of animals, viz—a squirrel's nest an a bee hive. The squirrels live by a strictly capitalistic system—each little family making its own individual home and laying up for itself alone a winter's supply of food. The bees on the other hand operate on a purely communistic system, each bee working solely for the good of the group as a whole. Yet, both groups live together peacefully in the same yard of my home.

In the same way these two opposite economic systems can get on peacefully together provided both will put production before profits and character before ease. This means that if we will live, work and invest usefully here at home we need not fear Russia. A good "milk cow" can always hold her own against any "Moscow."

Draft Delinquents Face Severe Penalties Here

Drastic new penalties for delinquents under the Selective Service Act will go into effect in Washington today, William E. Leahy, District director, announced last night.

The penalties provided would require local boards to induct into the service immediately, regardless of job or dependent status, any person found delinquent.

Also it is provided that any registrant who fails to report for induction shall be subject to a sentence of five years in the penitentiary or a fine of $10,000 or both.

A registrant will be classified as a delinquent if he fails to notify his own local draft board immediately of any change of address, if he fails to notify the board of any change in his status, such as a new job; if he fails to return his Selective Service questionnaire within the ten-day limit, if he fails to report for physical examination or induction at the time ordered, or if he fails to respond to any other order of his local board, Leahy said.

Edward Sabine Found Dead In Hotel Room

Edward J. Sabine, 50, until recently the director of personnel for the American Red Cross, and a member of the Haskell Russian Relief Commission, after World War I, was found dead in his room at the Roger Smith Hotel, 18th st. and Pennsylvania ave. nw., yesterday.

The discovery was made by Alfred Merrick, manager of the hotel, about 2 p. m. Dr. Christopher Murphy, deputy coroner, ordered an autopsy for 11:30 a. m. today.

Mr. Sabine was born in Chattanooga, Tenn., September 18, 1893.

A captain in the last war, he was sent by former President Hoover, then Secretary of Commerce, to Russia as a member of the Haskell commission. Later he was trade commissioner to India. He had fought for liberal views and the betterment of conditions for the working class.

He was a Works Progress Administration official of New York City in 1935 and 1936 and until August of this year, was personnel director for the American Red Cross.

After he left the Red Cross position, he went to California for his health, returning here recently. He maintained a family home in New York. A daughter, Anne, who is at private school in Hendersonville, N. C., and a brother, Horace Sabine of 37 Gallatin st. nw., identified with war work in Washington, and his wife, Mrs. Harriet Sabine, who arrived from New York last night, survive.

Charles T. Jacobs

Funeral services for Charles C. Jacobs, Washington Navy Yard machinist for 36 years, will be held today at 11 a. m. in Chambers funeral home, 517 11th st. se. Burial will be in Cedar Hill Cemetery.

Mr. Jacobs, who died Thursday at his home at 716 Uorth Carolina ave. se., came to Washington 43 years ago. The Rev. Bernard Munger of Memorial Congregational Church led a prayer service at the home yesterday.

Born in Peekskill, N. Y., Mr. Jacobs was 68. After his retirement from Government service seven years ago, he did special insurance work for the Ohio Casualty Co.

An air raid warden, he was a member and trustee of the Memorial Congregational Church. He was also a trustee of Friendship House and was on the board of the Home for the Aged.

Survivors are his wife, Mrs. Estelle Minnie Pyles Jacobs; a sister, Mrs. Jane Aldrich, at Binghamton, N. Y., and a brother, John W. Jacobs, of Williamsport, Pa.

Mrs. Pauline Wellbrock

Mrs. Pauline S. Wellbrock, 59, wife of Capt. John H. Wellbrock, chief of staff of the Potomac River Naval Command, died yesterday at their quarters in the Washington Navy Yard.

The couple, who last came here two years ago, had resided in Washington off and on since 1934, during Captain Wellbrock's various tours of duty in this area. Married since 1910, when Captain Wellbrock was graduated from the U. S. Naval Academy, they also had resided in China, Japan and the Philippines.

In addition to her husband, survivors are a brother, A. F. Schlatter of New York City; a daughter, Mrs. O. H. Dodson, wife of Commander Dodson of Washington and a grandson, John Dennis Dodson.

Funeral services will be held at the Zurhorst funeral home, 301 East Capitol st., date undecided.

Master Set of Lend-Lease Books Urged by Tydings

Baltimore, Oct. 31 (AP).—Establishment of the United States Government of "a master set of books" showing how much lend-lease and other aid the Nation has given to its Allies and how much it has received in return was suggested by Senator Tydings (Democrat) Maryland.

In his weekly broadcast, Tydings said that "unless we are in a position at the right moment to tell the world just how extensive our war effort has been, our peace delegates do not approach the conference table with the prestige to which they are entitled."

Job Shopping Curb Proves Effective

Increasingly strict control of "job shopping" and inmigrant labor under the new stabilization plan was indicated yesterday by Area War Manpower Commission officials, following disclosure that 30 workers here were required to return to old jobs in September because they lacked necessary statements of availability.

Fred Z. Hetzel, area WMC director, said that an "amazingly small" number of violations was brought to the attention of his office. He would not say whether this indicated compliance with the program or simply failure to report its violations.

Figures on labor migration during September revealed that of 2185 non-Governmental workers coming to Washington, only 208 brought statements of availability with them. The District USES requested statements from their home employment service in 1977 cases, before referring the workers to jobs. Statements were furnished in 1293 of the cases.

Officials pointed out that 711 workers received conditional referral slips in September, but that this practice has been abolished under the stabilization plan in operation since October 15.

In all, 294 statements were requested from the USES by outbound workers, of which 39 were denied. The report also pointed out that 860 persons tried to get statements from here after leaving the District, but that only 619 of these requests were granted.

Burns Suffered At Holloween Party Fatal to Girl, 8

Elenore Snyder, 8-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Richard P. Snyder, 809 D st. ne., died yesterday afternoon at Casualty Hospital as the result of burns received at a Halloween party. Doctors said she suffered second degree burns. It was the only accident to mar the festive season, according to police.

The child was taken to the hospital by her mother, Mrs. Grace Snyder, after the billowing skirt of her Halloween costume had ignited from a candle in a jack-o-lantern. She was playing in the back yard with a group of neighborhood children when the accident occurred.

Elenore was in the third grade at Edmonds School. Her father is a pressman at the Government Printing Office. Also surviving are a sister, Kathleen, 7 years old, and two brothers, Richard W., 9, and John Snyder, 3.

SUPERMAN HAS CONFRONTED THE FLEEING SPIES, MR. AND MRS. SUAN DOUT, ONLY TO BE FACED WITH SOMETHING A LITTLE OUT OF THE ORDINARY
"IS IT POSSIBLE THAT SUN MAY REALLY PROVE POWERFUL ENOUGH TO DESTROY ME!:-)
YOU THEEM THOMEWHAT UNDETHIDED, THUPERMAN! ITH IT POTHIBLE YOU'VE LOTHIT YOUR NERVE!
AND WELL HE MIGHT! THE CARTRIDGE IN THIS GUN IS ONLY 45 CALIBRE-- BUT THE POWDER CHARGE IS THE SAME USED IN AN 88 MILLIMETER CANNON-SHELL. DO YOU UNDERSTAND WHAT THAT MEANS, SUPERMAN?
IT MEANS THAT ALTHOUGH AN ORDINARY BULLET CANNOT HARM ME, NOR AN ORDINARY CANNON SHELL, YOU BELIEVE A HEAVY EXPLOSIVE CHARGE MIGHT PROPEL A COMPARATIVELY SMALL BULLET WITH SUCH HIGH VELOCITY THAT IT COULD NOT FAIL TO PENETRATE EVEN MY BODY.
YOUR STATEMENT OF THEORY IS ENTIRELY CORRECT, MY DEAR SUPERMAN!
AND YET, ONLY A THEORY. AND THE ONLY WAY TO PROVE OR DISPROVE IT IS TO-- FIRE AWAY!
